Where in a notice to an accused person under S. 110, it is not possible to give detailed information as to the nature of the evidence which the prosecution intend to adduce at the trial, the omission to give such details is not an irregularity sufficient to vitiate the proceedings. of the information which he has received in the notice issued under S. 112, does not render the subsequent proceeding ab initio void and an absolute nullity. The object of S. 112 in requiring the substance of the information to be given in the notice is to afford reasonable opportunity to the suspect to come prepared and a mere reproduction of a clause of S. 110 in the notice is not a sufficient compliance. The failure to comply with the directions contained in S. 112 does not, however, divest the Magistrate of his jurisdiction to deal with the suspect. It amounts to a grave and substantial irregularity which renders it necessary for the Courts of Appeal and of revision to scrutinize the subsequent proceedings carefully, and in the absence of prejudice, the subsequent proceedings cannot be treated as ab initio void. *Tanwar v. The District Magistrate who received a petition from a number of tenants that the landlord harassed them, forwarded it to the Sub-Divisional Officer. The Sub-Divisional Magistrate ordered the Police to make enquiry before drawing up proceedings under S. 110 against the landlord. The Police reported that the matter was of a civil nature. The Magistrate, however, drew up proceedings under S. 110, when there was no further material except the complaint-petition which did not mention names of persons who were oppressed or the place or date where and when the incidents took place. The landlord moved the Sessions Judge against this order but he refused to interfere. The District Magistrate was also moved and he transferred the case to the other Magistrate and ordered fresh local enquiry before continuing proceedings. This Magistrate noted in order-sheet that he had to discuss with the District Magistrate regarding his order to hold enquiry, and further noted after discussing personally that, the Magistrate had agreed with his view that no fresh enquiry was necessary. The landlord moved the High Court to quash the proceedings or to transfer them to another Magistrate: Held, quashing the proceedings and transferring the case to other Magistrate, (i) that there was no material for initiating the proceedings; (ii) that the landlord was not debarred from seeking the aid of the High Court even though he did not move the High Court immediately after the order of the Sessions Court; (iii) that the statement noted by the Magistrate regarding the discussion with the District Magistrate ought not to have found a place in the order-sheet. S. 110 is not intended to afford the Police a means of keeping a suspected person under detention until they are able to work out a case against him. Action of this kind on the part of the Police tends to throw doubt upon their work generally and a Magistrate should not detain a person under S. 110 unless he has the necessary information upon which he can make the order in writing required by S. 112. *Emperor v. The petitioner was ordered to give security for good behaviour for a term of three years, and in default, to suffer imprisonment for one year. The Magistrate ordered a security bond to be given for Rs. 1,000 and four sureties to bind themselves. Four sureties were offered. The Magistrate on the report of Police rejected one of them on the ground that he was a boy and another as a bad character and the remaining two as they were relatives. Financially it was admitted that each of these persons was fit to be surety for Rs. 1,000. The appeal against the order was rejected summarily: Held, that since the order did not state whether each and all of the sureties required were liable for Rs. 1,000 on occasion arising, or Rs. 1,000 between them, the order was bad in law; that to prevent misunderstanding, particulars like these should always be stated; that under S. 123 (2) of the Cr. P. C., inasmuch as the order for security specified a term exceeding one year during which accused was to be of good behaviour, the Magistrate in ordering detention of the accused should have referred the case to the Sessions Court and that the fact that the Magistrate ordered imprisonment for one year only did not affect the question of jurisdiction. *Mahala v. —Ss. 110 117—Surety—Security—Rejection, ground for—Police report.

The accused was called upon to give security for his good behaviour, R. offered himself as surety and thereupon the Magistrate ordered the Sub-Inspector of the Thana within whose limits R resided to report upon him. The Sub-Inspector made an unfavourable report and the Magistrate without taking any evidence and without giving notice to the accused rejected the surety : Held, that the Magistrate should not have rejected the surety merely upon the Police report. There is no objection to a Magistrate enquiring whether the Police have any reason to urge why a person should not be accepted as surety, but an unfavourable report should be treated not as evidence but as an objection made by a party to the proceeding, and that before the surety is rejected; notice of the report or objection should be given to the person bound over and the Magistrate should give both him and the Police an opportunity of adducing evidence. Emperor v. Parmeshwar, 1 Cr. L. J. 459 : 7 O. C. 113.

—Ss. 110, 514—Surety—Burma Gambling Act (I of 1899)—Security for good behaviour—Single penalty—Forfeiture of bond—Liability of sureties.

A bond executed under the provisions of S. 17, Gambling Act, read with S. 110, Code of Criminal Procedure, is a bond with a single penalty. A Magistrate directing the payment of money due thereon may remit any portion of the amount under S. 514 (5) of the Code. But such a remission is clearly an extinction of the liability of the parties to it for the amount remitted. Once the bond is forfeited, there is an end of it. Emperor v. Ignatio Reis, 14 Cr. L. Evidence of his general reputation about the matter and evidence that he was suspected in a particular case by a particular person or by the Police of having committed a theft can be led, but there must be a large number of such cases before it can be held provided on this evidence alone that he is by habit a thief. *Lilu v. —S. 112—Evidence—Notice under S. 107, if must relate to breach of peace or wrongful act in contemplation at time when information is given to Magistrate.

Action taken under S. 112, constitutes a judicial act and therefore the Magistrate should not act arbitrarily. There must be information of a nature which convinces him that there is a likelihood of a breach of the peace. What is reasonably sufficient to satisfy a Magistrate must depend on the particular situation. The Code does not require the information to show the particular act which is in contemplation at the time. The Magistrate must be satisfied that there is a likelihood of a breach of the peace. What will satisfy him must depend on the particular facts of the case. In re : Muthuswami Chettiar. 41 Cr. L. J. 238 : 185 I. C. 824 : 50 L. W. 802 : 1939 M. W. N. 1209 : 1940 1 M. L. J. 11 : I. L. —S. 112—Object of—Order requiring sureties, requirements of—Arbitrary standard—Reluctance to stand surety—Person, when satisfactory surety—Surety, rejection of.

The object of Chapter VIII of the Cr. P. C. is not to consign bad characters to jail, but to prevent them from committing offences. An order under S. 112 must be such that if a suspect have a bona fide intention to be of good behaviour, it will not be impossible for him to find sureties. It is unfair to a suspect to call on him to produce sureties of a certain class and then to reject the persons offered because they do not conform to an arbitrary standard not set up in the order. If the sureties offered come fairly within the terms of the order, they can only be rejected because they are personally unfit. Mere reluctance to be surety constitutes no valid objection unless the Magistrate is satisfied that the surety is, under what amounts to undue influence, undertaking a risk which, as a reasonable and prudent man, he would not take if a free agent. A man is a satisfactory surety if he is in a position to ascertain how the accused is behaving and if he is also of such character and standing that he would not hesitate to apply for cancellation of his bond if he saw risk of forfeiture. A surety should not be rejected merely because a Police Inspector informs the Magistrate that he is of bad character, when such rejection involves the committal of the accused to prison. *Muhammad Ibrahim v. The object of Chapter VIII is not the punishment of a suspect for past unproved crimes but to prevent him from committing offences and to afford him an opportunity of reforming himself. When once a Magistrate has, while passing orders under S. 112, imposed conditions as to the nature of sureties, and the amount of their liability, he cannot, when making the order absolute under S. 118, vary his previous order and impose fresh conditions. Sureties are not unfit because the suspect cannot be controlled by them nor can it be made a condition precedent for acceptance of sureties that they should show their good faith and influence over the suspect. Emperor v. Mani.

Cr. P. CODE (1898), S. 112

that he does not possess that degree of social importance and influence, such surety may be rejected. The standard of respectability must be left to the Magistrate to determine. A Magistrate is justified in using and applying his knowledge of his division when acting under S. 122, and if he knows that the inhabitants generally of a village bear a bad character, he is justified in rejecting as unfit any such inhabitants who may be offered as a surety provided that he records his reasons for doing so. *Emperor v. S. 112 of the Cr. P. C. gives the Magistrate power to define the class of sureties. An order, requiring sureties to be land-holders in the neighbourhood of the accused, either holding 100 acres of land or paying income-tax and able to control the accused, is not bad. High Court cannot entertain an application for revision of an order under S. 118. Jumo v. Emperor.

—Ss. 112, 122—Surety—Ability to influence bad character—Solvency, test of.

A surety executing a bond undertakes to guarantee the good conduct of his principal, and his fitness to stand as surety must be judged chiefly by the ability to perform his contract of guarantee and to enforce the good behaviour of his principal. This is also the intention of S. 112, empowering the Magistrate to specify the "character and class" of the sureties required. Mere solvency of the surety is, therefore, not the only test of his fitness. The Magistrate has also to consider the question of the ability of the surety to influence the conduct of the bad character. But in so doing, the Magistrate should not exercise his power arbitrarily or impose impossible restrictions. Imperator v. Manu.

—Ss. 112, 123—Object of—Security demanded for more than one year—Appeal—Sessions Judge, duty of—Imprisonment, commencement of—Period spent on bail, exclusion of—Description of security.

When a Magistrate directs that the accused should give security for more than one year, an appeal from his order would lie to the District Magistrate, and, if such an appeal is filed, the Sessions Court would not proceed under S. 123 of the Code until the appeal is disposed of. Should, however, no appeal be filed within the period of limitation, then the Sessions Court would proceed under the section. The Sessions Judge, should, hear both the accused person and the Crown and see, whether there are substantial grounds for demanding security; but it is not necessary for him to write a judgment as if the matter were an appeal. The imprisonment under Chapter VIII, Cr. P. C., runs from the date of the Magistrate's order, and is not suspended during the time spent on bail. S. 123, however, gives the Sessions Judge power in suitable cases to enhance the sentence passed by the Magistrate. In such cases, the Sessions Judge would have jurisdiction to exclude from the computation of the period of imprisonment the period spent by the accused person on bail. It is, however, undesirable to adopt this course without special reasons. The object of Chapter VIII of the Cr. P. C. is partially served even when an accused is on bail for a long time, Chapter VIII, Cr. P. C. is not intended to punish but to prevent crime, and it is not permissible to limit the security or the amount of the security to such descriptions that it is impossible for the accused to furnish them. *Allahdad v. S. 167 is not intended for cases in which action is taken under S. 112. A Magistrate acting under Chap. VIII has no power to act until after he has recorded an order in writing under S. 112. No person is to be called upon to show cause why an order should not be made against him until there is, before the Magistrate, some information which such Magistrate has reason to believe. The Code gives a Magistrate no power to issue summons, warrant or order of detention until he has first upon his table something recorded by him in writing showing the ground upon which he is taking action. *Rameshwar v. High Court is always very unwilling to interfere in the case of orders passed under the preventive sections of the Cr. P. C. These orders are largely of an administrative nature; they are concerned with the maintenance of the public peace and the prevention of breaches of the public peace for the maintenance of which the District Magistrate is responsible. But these orders, though largely of an administrative nature, have a legal basis, and if it is clear that an order under S. 112, has no legal basis, and that the District Magistrate has proceeded upon a wrong legal principle applying equally to the wrong-doers as well as to the wronged, his wide powers, the High Court is bound to interfere. *Jasoda Lekhraj v. S. 117 (4), is an exception to the general rule of evidence and should be sparingly used and only in exceptional circumstances. The general rule of law is that every man is presumed not to be a criminal or an offender until he has been found guilty by a competent Court. Conviction by public opinion should only be permitted to take the place of conviction by a Court in rare and exceptional circumstances, e.g. where the advent of a suspicious stranger in a village coincides with a series of crimes and suspicion waxes so strong and is so well justified that it may fairly be allowed to take the place of proof, and in such unusual circumstances, the section sanctions an experimental use of the security sections. But where a person has lived all his life in a locality without being ever brought before a Court of Law for any crime, there is absolutely no justification for any such experiment or for making any presumption that he is a criminal. *In re : K. Enquiries under Chapter VIII of the Code of Cr. P. are governed by the ordinary rules of evidence. Evidence which would not be admissible at an ordinary trial should not be admitted at a trial under S. 117. Evidence of general repute may be either evidence as to the general opinion of the neighbourhood or community in which the person concerned lives or to which he belongs, or the personal opinion of the witnesses who are examined. The test of the admissibility of evidence of general opinion is whether it shows the general reputation of the man, not necessarily the opinion of the entire community to which he belongs but at least the opinion of a considerable number of persons. It must not be merely the repetition of what one or two persons have said to the witness. A witness to general reputation may be examined and cross-examined as to his means of knowledge, and when he gives his own opinion, he may be asked to give the grounds of his opinion and to give the names of the persons whom he has heard speak against the character of the person concerned. *Bechai v. Cr. P. CODE (1898), S. 117

Evidence of personal opinions as to the character of an accused person in inquiries under S. 117 is inadmissible. Every man is conscious as to what his general reputation is, and by necessary association of ideas, he is also conscious of the limited or the extensive circle, as the case may be, within which his reputation generally exists. The opinion held by the body of persons within that circle as to his character is his "general repute." Evidence which discloses the opinion of such persons collectively is, therefore, evidence in proof of general reputation. Evidence of general repute is evidence of a fact which could be heard, and evidence of only such witnesses is admissible who say that they heard the general reputation of the accused to be so and so. Evidence, therefore, which only repeats what the witnesses heard from some specified individuals will be purely hearsay, and as such, inadmissible. Ashiq Ali v. Emperor.

The words “such further evidence as may appear necessary” in S. 117 refer to evidence ejusdem generis with the evidence described in the words immediately preceding. The law does not intend that the transfer of a case should be ordered simply because an accused person thinks that he would not get an impartial trial but the real question to be considered is whether on the facts disclosed in the application and the affidavit supporting the application for transfer, there arises a reasonable apprehension that the Magistrate who is seized of the case may be prejudiced willingly or unwillingly against the accused. The accused summoned 20 witnesses in the first list, and then gave a second list to summon 200 more witnesses. The Magistrate refused to summon the 200 men mentioned in the second list on the ground that it had been given for the purpose of vexation and delay and for defeating the ends of justice. The Magistrate also prevented the Counsel of the accused from putting some questions in cross-examination under Ss. 151 and 152 of the Evidence Act which led the Counsel to withdraw from the case: Held, that on both points the Magistrate exercised the judicious discretion vested in him by laws and there was no justification for transferring the case from the Court of that Magistrate. *Juggan v. ———Ss. 117, 356, 357, 360—Security proceedings—Evidence, record of—Procedure—Non-compliance with provisions of S. 360—Illegality.

Per Neebould, J.—S. 356, Cr. P. C., must be held to prescribe the manner in which evidence should be recorded in warrant cases. Therefore S. 360 is applicable to proceeding under S. 117 when a person is called upon to show cause why he should not furnish security for good behaviour and failure to comply with the provisions of that section would vitiate the inquiry or trial. Per Ghose, J.—The provisions of S. 360 of the Cr. P. C. are matter of procedure and having regard to the fact that the directions contained in the section are mandatory, the disregard of the provisions of that section with regard to any trial or inquiry vitiates the whole trial or inquiry. In making inquiries under S. 117 evidence should be recorded as in a warrant case, but Chap. VIII of the Code not having been referred in S. 356, S. 360 of the Code has no application to the record of such evidence. Sanatan Bhattacharya v. Emperor.

Although where an accused presents an application under S. 526 (8), the Court is bound to stay all judicial proceedings, the jurisdiction of the Court in the matter does not cease altogether and the Court has power to pass emergent orders which the law authorises it to pass, e. g., an order under S. 117 (3) directing the accused to execute a bond to keep the peace till the final disposal of the case. *Haji Baqridi v. It depends upon the facts and circumstances of each case as to whether a consent to give security amounts to a plea of guilty. When an accused called upon to give security for keeping the peace, says in terms that no prosecution evidence may be recorded and is willing to give security, there is ample ground for calling upon him to execute the bond. *Dukhi v. An order made under S. 117 (3), is exempt from the provisions of Chap. XXXIX relating to bail. The function of S. 117 (3) is to prevent a breach of peace or disturbance of the public tranquillity or the commission of any offence or in the interest of public safety pending an enquiry under Ss. 108, 109 and 110. The security which the Magistrate orders to be furnished cannot be reduced by the High Court under S. 498, though in exercise of its inherent powers it can consider whether the interim security is not too high. The order of the High Court reducing interim security does not, however, fetter the discretion of the Magistrate as to the amount of security which he may order to furnish ultimately. Where, there is nothing to indicate that the inquiry has not been fair and impartial, except that the proceedings against the petitioners were hurried and the petitioners remain unrepresented through no fault of the Magistrate, there is no ground for transfer. *Jagir Singh v. An order passed under S. 117 (3), Cr. P. C., merely stating that it is passed "on account of emergency" is a bad order. S. 122 of the Cr. P. C. gives a discretion to a Magistrate to refuse or accept the sureties according as he considers them unfit or otherwise for the purpose for which the security is required. In each case the Magistrate must consider whether the surety is in a position to exercise considerable control and supervision over the accused. The mere solvency of a surety may not invariably be sufficient to ensure the good conduct of the accused any more than the mere fact of his residing at a distant place may be a sufficient ground for rejecting him as such. It is reasonable to expect and require that the sureties to be rendered, should not be sureties from such distance as to make it unlikely that they would exercise any control over the man for whom they are willing to stand surety. If the sureties undertake to keep the accused within the area of their observation or to adopt other suitable measures, for securing the supervision and control needed to keep him in good behaviour, there can be no inherent objection to their being accepted as sufficient. *Emperor v. The Sessions Judge, in writing his order, should show that he has considered the case of each individual prisoner on its own merits. When the question is whether a man is a habitual cheat, the fact that he belongs to an organization formed for the purpose of habitually cheating in concert, is relevant under S. 11 of the Evidence Act. It is unsafe and improper to accept, as security for good behaviour, men whom the Magistrate does not know himself, and who will not appear before him to be questioned. A Magistrate cannot refuse the sureties on the ground that when they were called on to state in writing what influence they had over the accused persons, they failed to do so. (Per Coxe, J.—Ryver, J. dissenting)—S. 122 does not necessitate a judicial inquiry at all; but if it does, such an enquiry may be delegated to another Magistrate. A Magistrate ought to record his reasons in the order; but the omission does not justify interference by the High Court in revision where the Subordinate Magistrate to whom the inquiry was transferred recorded his reasons for rejecting the sureties and the inquiring Magistrate accepted them. Kalu Mirza v. Emperor.

Consequently, where the suspected person is already undergoing imprisonment at the time an order under S. 118 has to be passed, the proper order is to direct that the period for which the suspect is required to give security shall commence from the date of the expiration of the sentence of imprisonment he is then undergoing. Cr. P. CODE (1898), S. 125

—S. 125—Petition under S. 125—Right of petitioner to be heard.

A District Magistrate dealing with an application under S. 125 is exercising neither appellate nor revisional jurisdiction and it is not incumbent upon him to hear the Mukhtiar of the petitioner before disposing of the application. Khetrabasi Sahu v. Emperor.

19 Cr. L. J. 246 :
44 I. C. 38 : A. I. R. 1918 Pat. 184.

—S. 125—Security for keeping peace—Bond for keeping peace, cancellation of—District Magistrate, jurisdiction of.

S. 125 does not confer upon a District Magistrate either an appellate or revisional jurisdiction, but it confers an original jurisdiction in respect of orders binding down persons to keep the peace. A person so bound down has no remedy by way of appeal to the District Magistrate. The proper course for him is to bring his case in revision before the Sessions Judge. Sheo Singh v. Emperor.

—S. 125—Security to keep peace—Petition for cancellation of bond—District Magistrate giving date for hearing—Petition dismissed without hearing petitioner—Dismissal set aside.

A case was fixed by the District Magistrate for a certain date while he was on tour. Intimation of the date so fixed was given to the accused but they were not informed of the place where the case would be heard; they failed to appear at that place, and the District Magistrate dismissed their petition without hearing them: Held, that the order of dismissal could not be maintained. *Mehr Bakhsh v. —Ss. 125, 406, Scope of—Order to execute bond for keeping peace—District Magistrate's power to cancel bond.

S. 125 covers a case where the District Magistrate finds that the materials before the Subordinate Magistrate were not sufficient to justify an order for taking security. S. 406 of the Code gives an appeal to the District Magistrate from an order to furnish security for good behaviour, while S. 125 relates to orders for keeping the peace as well as to those from which S. 406 allows an appeal. *Emperor v. A proceeding under S. 125 is neither appellate nor revisional and S. 428 of the Code dealing with remand has no application to an order under S. 125. Where, therefore, a District Magistrate finds that an order regarding security is illegal or irregular, he should set it aside and not remand the case for further enquiry. Nasiban v. Emperor.

—Ss. 125, 435, 438—Revision—Concurrent power of High Court with subordinate Courts—Procedure.

In cases where the High Court has concurrent revisional jurisdiction with a subordinate Court, the aggrieved party should, in the first instance, seek his remedy before the subordinate Court. There is no ground for holding that the revisional jurisdiction of a Sessions Judge or of a District Magistrate under Ss. 435 and 438, Cr. P. C. is in any way trenching upon by the provisions of S. 125. The jurisdiction of a Sessions Judge or a District Magistrate under S. 435, Cr. P. C. is concurrent with that of the High Court, even where the former cannot pass a formal order but can only refer the matter to the latter under S. 438. Bipin Bihari Mukherji v. Emperor.

—Ss. 125, 439—Security to keep peace, order for—Application to cancel bond, hearing of—Procedure—Appeal—Revision.

Cr. P. CODE (1898), S. 127

S. 125 does not give a right of appeal against an order directing security to be given to keep the peace. All that the accused is entitled to under the section is to ask the District Magistrate to exercise his powers under the section to cancel the bond. Such an application should not be dismissed without giving an opportunity of being heard. Semle.—An application for revision made to a High Court in respect of orders to give security to keep the peace ought not to be rejected solely on the ground that the applicant did not first make an application to the District Magistrate. *Sita Ram v. He applied to the District Magistrate to have the order set aside. Where in a charge against certain constables for offences under Ss. 149, 304 and 326 of the Penal Code, for which no sanction was necessary, the defence was that they, under the orders of an officer-in-charge of a Police Station, acted in pursuance of the provisions of Ss. 127 and 128, Cr. P. C., the Jury should be told that if they could not accept the case for the prosecution, they would have next to consider the provisions of Ss. 127 and 128, Cr. P. C. and determine whether the officer-in-charge of the Police Station acted or meant to act under these sections and whether the constables acted under his orders, and that, if the Jury were unable to accept the case for the prosecution, and on the contrary accepted the defence, the prosecution could not, in the absence of sanction of the Governor-General in Council, be continued and the accused were entitled to an acquittal. Only if the Jury negatived both the case for the prosecution and the case for the defence, was it necessary for them to consider the further questions then arising, namely, whether the accused acted in the exercise of the right of private defence and whether they had or had not exceeded that right.

To take the witnesses one by one in the order of their examination and to place their disconnected statements before the Jury is not in general very helpful. More assistance will be derived by the Jury from a careful collection of the evidence, as it bears on the several allegations of the respective parties.

To read to the Jury the exposition of the law of England re : the use of military force can only serve to confuse the Jury and to distract their attention from the facts with which they have to deal. Abdul Rahim Mir v. Emperor.

power of—Jury trial—Charge to Jury—Right of private defence, failure to explain, effect of—Misdirection—Charge by angry crowd—Right of private defence, extent of.

The power to disperse an unlawful assembly by force is not given by Cr. P. C. to any Police Officer below the rank of an officer-in-charge of a Police Station. The powers of a Police Officer-in-charge of a patrol boat are no higher than those of an officer-in-charge of an outpost, and such an officer has no power to act under Chapter IX of the Cr. P. C. and cannot, therefore, purport to act under that Chapter within the meaning of S. 132 of the Code.

Where in explaining S. 100 of the Penal Code to the Jury the Sessions Judge failed to explain that an apprehension of grievous hurt would also confer a right on the accused to cause death in the exercise of the right of private defence :

Held, that the omission amounted to a serious misdirection.

When a person is set on by any angry crowd and there is apprehension of death or grievous hurt being caused, the only remedy is the drastic one of shooting to kill in the first instance, as anything less is likely to increase the fury of the crowd.

An angry crowd is the more dangerous because persons composing it will commit crimes jointly that they would never commit individually. Mahommed Yunus v. Emperor.

—Ss. 133, 142—Applicability—S. 133 whether governs cases where imminent breach of peace is apprehended.

S. 133 does not govern cases where an imminent breach of the peace is apprehended. The serious injury or the "imminent danger" contemplated by S. 142, refers to the injury or danger emanating from those things themselves which are specified in S. 133 and consequently S. 142 is limited in its scope. An order under S. 142 can, therefore, be passed only if an injury or danger specified in S. 133 was apprehended and not otherwise. Mohammad Ashraf v. Emperor.

Some villagers complained of obstruction to a public way. Sub-Divisional Officer referred the matter to one of his subordinates, suggesting proceedings under S. 133. Judging from the facing sheet the matter was first taken up as a revenue proceeding. Months afterwards the Township Officer took evidence. He submitted this evidence to the Sub-Divisional Officer, who drew up a conditional order under S. 133 directing not only the removal of the fence complained of, but also the house which did not obstruct the footpath. This order was headed as being a proceeding of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, but was filed with the previous revenue proceeding. The applicant was called on to show cause before the Township Magistrate of Kyauktan why the order should not be set aside. He appeared and showed cause. The only evidence taken was that of witnesses called by the applicant. No notice was given to the original complainants. The Magistrate submitted the evidence to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate with a report and the latter Magistrate then made the conditional order absolute: Held, that S. 137 of the Code (1) contemplates that the order absolute should be made by the Magistrate to whom a case is referred under S. 133; and that even if the Sub-Divisional Magistrate had jurisdiction to make the order absolute, his order that the applicant should remove his house was ultra vires, as it was not based upon the house being built upon the public way, but it was avowedly made because the applicant, if he was allowed to live there, would be able to interfere with people along the way, that is, the order was based on the applicant—not his house—being a public nuisance. *Moung Shwe Ye v. Application to a Magistrate for removal of the embankment of a tank constructed by the plaintiff on the ground that it obstructed the passage of water and endangered the houses in the village. The Magistrate made a conditional order directing the removal and it was referred to a Jury under S. 138. The Jury proposed that the water should flow out through the tank, that the banks of the tank on the north and south should be cut and that there should be sluices on each bank of the tank. When an order is made under S. 133 preventing obstruction to the public in the use of a way, the Magistrate shall question the respondent as to whether he denies the existence of public right. If the respondent does, the Magistrate shall, before proceeding under S. 137 or S. 138, inquire into the matter. If the Magistrate finds that there is any reliable evidence in support of such denial, he shall stay the proceedings until it has been decided by a Civil Court. The procedure under Chap. X, is constantly causing difficulty to the Courts. It is to be observed that when an order under S. 133 is made with reference to an obstruction in a public way, and the person appears before the Magistrate, the Magistrate must, before inquiry under Ss. 137 and 138 question the person whether he denies the public right. At this stage it is for the person so proceeded against to adduce evidence in support of his denial and for the Magistrate to make a finding whether a public right is denied or not, and if it is denied, whether there is reliable evidence in support. If the right of way is not denied or if there is no reliable evidence, the Magistrate should then proceed under Ss. 137 and 138, and in this inquiry, Crown is to lead evidence and the person proceeded against to answer it. *Emperor v. ———Ss. 133, 137—Procedure—Order to show cause—Who should start proceedings and produce evidence.

When the person against whom a conditional order is made under S. 133, appears to show cause and moves the Magistrate to set aside or modify the order, he is not to show that the order was not justified, nor to produce his evidence first. The words of S. 137, "shall take evidence in the matter as in a summons case" do not mean that he is to start the proceedings and produce evidence to meet a case which he never heard. He is entitled to hear the evidence, as in a summons case, produced by the opposite party, and then produce his own evidence. Therefore, where a Magistrate called upon the person proceeded against to produce his evidence first and considering that evidence made the conditional order absolute, his order was set aside as illegal. *Srinath Roy v. If there is any reliable evidence, the Magistrate has to refer the parties to go to the Civil Court. If he instead of proceeding as above, proceeds to conduct an inquiry straightway under S. 137 and taking evidence on both the sides passes an order, such order is totally without jurisdiction and is liable to be set aside. *Govinda Goundan v. There are two distinct stages in any enquiry under Chap. X. The first stage is prescribed by S. 139-A, and when that section has been complied with and there is no reliable evidence of the denial of the alleged public right by the persons against whom the conditional order is issued, the Magistrate should commence the second stage of the enquiry as provided by S. 137. A Magistrate is to make an enquiry of title upon weighing evidence produced on both sides. A Magistrate is required under S. 139-A to hold an enquiry merely to satisfy himself if, there is or is not some prima facie evidence in support of the denial. In this part of the enquiry it is open to him to allow the witnesses, produced by the person denying the public right, to be cross-examined, but he cannot allow the opposite party to produce definite evidence to the contrary and then proceed to weigh the evidence to decide finally whether the alleged public right does or does not exist. *Chunni v. An order under S. 137 (3), is not like an order under S. 144 which spends itself in 60 days; and if the order under S. 137 (3) is not good by reason of the nuisance having abated and is allowed to remain in force, then in case of future proceedings, it is apt to be used against the party against whom such order is passed. Therefore, it must be set aside by the Appellate authority. Kalyan Mul Mathur v. Emperor.

In S. 141, Cr. P. C., the word "discretion" is used in relation to the extension of time within which the jury is to give their verdict. It is not used in relation to the order passed by the Magistrate. The Magistrate has a discretion under S. 141 as to the order he should pass and that discretion means a judicial discretion. The Magistrate cannot, under that section, pass an arbitrary or capricious or whimsical order. The order passed must be a reasoned order. Where the persons against whom an order under S. 133 is passed have chosen to be heard by a jury, —S. 144—Action under, when to be taken—Nuisance—Remedy of complainant—Civil dispute—Duty of Court.

It is not proper that Criminal Courts should take upon themselves to decide what are really civil disputes. Action should be taken under S. 144 only in urgent cases of nuisance or apprehended danger and should not be taken at the instance of a party who can easily remedy the consequences of the act complained of and whose complaint is really of a civil nature. *Haji Ali v. —S. 144—Adi-Dravidas, rights of, to take out procession through locality of caste-Hindus—Order under S. 144, when can be made.

There can be no doubt that the Adi-Dravidas have a civil right to take a procession along all public streets, just as any other persons may have and the caste-residents have no right to object. Ordinarily those responsible for law and order should see that persons exercising their rights have the support of the Police and the Magistracy; but cases do, of course, arise where in the interests of public peace, persons should be prevented from exercising their rights. If the Adi-Dravidas, for example, are anxious to conduct a procession, not, to honour Sri Thiruvalluvar but in order to irritate and annoy the caste-residents of those streets, then the Magistrate would be justified in placing some restraint upon their processions. *Shanmuga Pandaram v. Where the right or possession of the parties is not free from doubt and there is a danger of disturbance of public tranquillity on account of both the parties asserting their right and possession over the lands in question, it is inequitable to take action under S. 144 to restrain one party as against the other, the virtual effect of which would be to usurp the functions of the Civil Court and to decide the right and title over the disputed land including the right of possession. Where the right of a party is clear and there is a threatened invasion of that right by another party, a temporary order under S. 144 might be useful and effective. Similarly, under S. 107 where parties are in the wrong, they can be bound down in order to prevent a breach of the peace. But where there is a doubt as to the right of the parties to be in possession of immovable property, the only effective remedy is that provided by S. 145 of the Code, under which if the Magistrate after due enquiry comes to the conclusion that one of the parties is in clear possession, he will uphold its possession until it is evicted in due course of law, and if on the other hand, the Magistrate finds it difficult to decide which of the parties is in actual possession, he has got a remedy to prevent a breach of the peace under S. 146 by attaching the subject-matter of the dispute. *Gouri Dutt v. S. 144 is applicable only to temporary orders in urgent cases of nuisance or apprehended danger; its provisions do not apply to cases where there is a dispute as to land for the settlement of which S. 145 provides the proper remedy. In a proceeding under S. 144 the Magistrate without taking any evidence and without considering the documents produced or which might have been produced by the parties, found in favour of the second party and made an order absolute as regards possessions. On revision : Held, that the order was without jurisdiction, and could not be sustained, inasmuch as action under S. 144 can only be taken after the Magistrate is satisfied that immediate prevention or speedy remedy is necessary, and when he is satisfied that it is so, he must state the material facts in the order. An order made by a Magistrate outside the scope of cl. (1) of S. 44 is revisable by the High Court in exercise of its power of superintendence under S. 107 of the Government of India Act, even though no application was in the first instance made to the District Magistrate. *Akal Mahton v. ———Ss. 144, 145—Dispute relating to land—Procedure—Jurisdiction of Magistrate—Order under S. 144, value of, as evidence of possession.

S. 144 does not oust the jurisdiction of a Magistrate in cases of bona fide disputes as to possession of land. Where, however, S. 107 or S. 145 will meet the requirements of the case, S. 144 is not an appropriate remedy and if it is found that the danger was not so imminent that it could not be otherwise averted, an order under S. 144 will be without jurisdiction. Where it is clear upon the materials before the Magistrate that one party is in possession and that another whose claim to possession is a mere pretence is threatening to interfere with that possession, the Magistrate is entitled to resort to S. 144, if immediate provision of speedy remedy is desirable. Where in the course of a proceeding under S. 144 the Magistrate finds that there is a bona fide dispute of possession of land likely to cause a breach of the peace, he is bound immediately to take action under S. 145. The use of S. 144 is a suitable method of avoiding a breach of the peace only if it is clear upon a reading of the Police report that the claim of the party creating the disturbance is not a claim made in good faith. Any observation made in an order under S. 144 by the Magistrate as regards the possession of any of the parties must be treated simply as an incidental observation meant to enable the Magistrate to make an order under the section, and cannot have the force of an order under S. 145 and is of no use in a subsequent proceeding. *Munni Lal Sao v. Held, that the order was misconceived. The proper course was for the Magistrate to ascertain which party was in wrong and was interfering unnecessarily with the legal exercise of the legal powers of the other party, and to bind down that party restraining them from committing any act which may lead to a breach of the peace. *Mohammad Ismail v. The scope of S. 144 is very limited and the powers vested in the Magistrate by that section ought to be exercised sparingly and only in urgent cases. Civil Courts alone have been vested by the Legislature with jurisdiction to decide disputes of a civil nature between private individuals and it is not permissible for a Magistrate, under the cover of an order under S. 144, to dispossess a particular individual from certain property and to direct delivery of possession of that property by an order under S. 144, when the object of the order is not to prevent obstruction, annoyance or injury, etc., "to any person lawfully employed." The High Court has jurisdiction on setting aside an illegal order passed by a Magistrate for delivery of property under S. 144, to direct that the property be delivered to the person who was originally in possession of it. *Hafizuddin v. ———S. 144—Jurisdiction of Magistrate to pass order—Imminent danger—Order, whether can be set aside after expiry of 2 months.

The jurisdiction of a Magistrate to pass an order under S. 144 depends on the urgency of the case. A mere statement by the Magistrate that he considers the case to be urgent is not sufficient to give him jurisdiction, if the facts set out by him show that in reality there is no urgent necessity for action. A Magistrate, by an order under S. 144, directed the petitioner to remove an obstruction to a culvert through which drainage of the Railway menial quarters used to flow into his tank and the only fact set out indicating any imminent danger was that a rainfall of one inch in an hour would flood the menial quarters and compel their evacuation : Held (1) that this was an imminent danger of quite a different kind to that contemplated by S. 144; it was a danger to the inhabitants of a particular quarter who might be inconvenienced but was not a source of danger to public health ; (2) that the order under S. 144, should be set aside even though more than 2 months had expired since its passing, inasmuch as a prosecution of a petitioner under S. 188, Penal Code, for disobedience to the order had been instituted. *Chandra Nath Mukerjee v. The rule that S. 144 ought not to be utilized in a dispute regarding the possession of land except against a party whose claim is not made in good faith is not a rule of jurisdiction but only of propriety to give the Magistrate jurisdiction under S. 144, all that is required is that he shall be of opinion that there is sufficient ground to proceed under the section, and that immediate prevention or speedy remedy is desirable and that the direction which he proposes to make is likely to prevent or tends to prevent a disturbance of the public tranquillity or a riot or an affray. In such circumstances, private rights must give way. An order under S. 144 cannot be impugned as without jurisdiction merely because it is arbitrary. The correct stand-point from which to view the propriety of an order under S. 144 is that of the Magistrate at the time when he passed it and in the light of the materials then before him. But an order without material is liable to be set aside by the High Court. Radhe Das v. Jairam Mahto.

———S. 144—Liberty of individual, respect for—Magistrate, duty of—Proper procedure—Vague and indefinite order.

S. 144 is not intended to restrict the liberty of an individual if there is no apprehension of a breach of the peace on account of any act to be done by him. Thus if it is found that a man is doing that which he is legally entitled to do and that his neighbour chooses to take offence thereat and to create a disturbance in consequence, it is clear that the duty of the Magistrate is not to continue to deprive the first person of the exercise of his legal right but to restrain the second from illegally interfering with that exercise of legal right. An order under S. 144, merely reciting that in the opinion of the Magistrate there is sufficient ground for proceeding under that section, does not sufficiently comply with the requirements of the law. A vague and indefinite order which does not state any facts relating to the case or does not define the limits within which it is to operate is bad in law. Blong v. Emperor.

In the circumstances set forth in sub-s. (1), a Magistrate may not only direct an individual to abstain from a certain act or acts but may also issue a similar direction to members of the public generally, provided in the latter case the prohibition is limited to occasions on which the members of the public may frequent or visit a particular place. In other words, it would not be legal to issue a general prohibition to the public to abstain from a certain act but an order to the public generally to abstain from a certain act on the occasions when they happened to visit a particular place would be valid. The language is also sufficiently wide to cover residents in a particular locality but, in either case, it is, of course, essential that the place covered by the order and also the act prohibited should be described with reasonable precision, whether such place be an entire district or a particular street in a town and whatever the nature of the prohibited act may be. Abu Husain v. Emperor.

The period during which an order under S. 144 remains in force is two months only and it cannot be extended beyond that period by the Magistrate. To draw up an order practically in the terms in which a previous order has been passed merely adding to the number of the parties affected, amounts to an attempt to evade the provisions of cl. (6) of S. 144, and cannot be regarded as a separate order which can remain in force for a further period of two months from its date. Under cl. (3) of S. 144 an order can be issued to the public generally only when frequenting or visiting a particular place. An order under this class in so far as it directs the public in general to abstain from attending a particular place is bad since it is not until the public attend that place that the order can be binding on them. Although in cases of sudden emergency it may be necessary to restrict a person from exercising a perfectly lawful right, it should not be necessary to prevent that person not only on a particular occasion in the near future but for all time from exercising that right merely because it would be too much trouble to the Magistrate to render him adequate protection against persons who intend to disobey the law. Orders under S. 144 are certainly not intended to be used as a means of depriving the citizens of lawful rights which have been declared by competent Courts. Where the Hindus of a place who have obtained a decree declaring their rights as against the Muhammadans to take possession with music outside a mosque on certain conditions, give reasonable notice to the authorities that they propose to take their procession, it is incumbent on the authorities to take such action as will protect their rights. An order under S. 144, enjoining not to establish a rival market within a quarter of a mile of a certain market place is not a proper order under S. 144, Cr. P. C., as it does not mention any limits of time. The object of S. 144 is not that orders should be made proscribing the holding of hats indefinitely within a certain area for two months. The proper way of preventing a breach of the peace is to proceed under S. 107. Bidhu Ranjan Mazumdar v. Ramesh Chandra Rai. 5 Cr. L. J. 43 : 11 C. W. N. 223.

—Ss. 144, 145—Order under S. 144—Rescission or alteration—Proceeding under S. 145—Likelihood of breach of peace.

Although under S. 144 (4) it is open to any Magistrate to rescind or alter any order made under the section by himself or any Magistrate subordinate to him or by his predecessor-in-office that section does not cover a reversal of an order on grounds, which interfere with the discretionary power of the officer by whom such order was originally made; it comprises only the rescission or alteration of the order when the reason for its having been made no longer exists or has varied in such a manner as to make an alteration necessary as a corollary. Even though on proper grounds a Magistrate rescinds or alters an order made by another Magistrate under S. 144, it is not open to such Magistrate at all to direct that other Magistrate to initiate proceedings under S. 145. In order that proceedings should be legal under S. 145, the information upon which a Magistrate purports to act must be information, which is of a character which properly satisfies him that at the date when he draws up those proceedings there was an actual likelihood of a breach of the peace. *Chhedi Lal v. The proper course to be followed by a District Magistrate when he is of opinion that proceedings under S. 144 have been wrongly drawn up by a Subordinate Magistrate and that the right course would be to take action under S. 145, is to make a reference to the High Court under S. 438 of the Code. He has no power to order the subordinate Magistrate to draw up proceedings under S. 145. But proceedings drawn up by a Subordinate Magistrate under S. 145, will not be set aside in revision merely because they were drawn up under the instructions of the District Magistrate, if the proceedings are based upon a Police Report and show that the Subordinate Magistrate was satisfied from the report that there was likelihood of a breach of the peace. *Kedar Nath Sikdar v. Orders under S. 144, which are in force only for 2 months, cannot be revised by the High Court after the lapse of the two months. Every act done by Magistrate in pursuance of the powers given to him by S. 36 and Sch. III, Cr. P. C., is done by him as a Court and urgent orders under S. 144, Cr. P. C., passed by a Magistrate are in their nature "judicial proceedings." The effect of the omission in the amending Act of 1923, of cl. 3 of S. 435 of the Code of 1898, is that the ban upon the High Court's powers of revision of orders under S. 145 under the earlier Act, has been removed and the High Court has no power to revise such orders under S. 435, Cr. ———S. 144—Powers conferred on Magistrates under S. 144, scope of—Duty of Magistrate.

S. 144 deals with urgent cases of nuisance and apprehended danger of the breach of the public peace. Where there is danger of the breach of the public peace apprehended, and in consequence thereof, an immediate prevention is necessary, Magistrate specially empowered in that behalf may issue instructions to individuals or the public in general to abstain from a certain act. The power thus conferred on the Magistrates is an extraordinary power. It enables them to suspend the lawful rights of the public if they think such a suspension will be in the interests of public peace and safety. The Magistrates, however, should bear in mind that every citizen has a right to ventilate his grievances either in public or in private and ask for redress. This right should not be curtailed so long as it is exercised in a lawful manner. It is an illegal assumption of power to issue an order under S. 144 on a pretended apprehension of the danger of the breach of the public peace. Thakin Aung Bala v. District Magistrate, Rangoon.

—Ss. 144, 145—Proceedings under S. 144, basis of—Jurisdiction—Revision—Interference.

Where there is a dispute as to the possession of property between the parties, S. 145 is the proper section which would, in a proper enquiry, determine once for all the rights of possession of the party to the property in dispute : but in cases where the possession of the property is with any of the parties, it would be equally hard to institute a protracted enquiry under S. 145 against him. If the Magistrate is satisfied that one of the parties is in possession and that an imminent danger of a breach of the peace is impending; it is incumbent upon the Magistrate to maintain the party in possession and forbid the party who is not in possession by an order under S. 144. The question is one for the Magistrate to decide which party was in possession at that stage. If there is no material before the Magistrate, then the High Court can interfere upon the ground that there was no material before the Magistrate to decide possession in favour of one of the parties, and to take action against the other party under S. 144; but if there is material before the Magistrate, he is the only Judge as to whether the material is sufficient or not, and if upon the materials placed before him, he is satisfied that one of the parties is in possession, the order under S. 144 against the party interfering with his possession is not without jurisdiction at all. *Bansi Singh v. Where a Magistrate apprehends that with the force at his disposal, he cannot prevent a breach of the peace, he has jurisdiction to pass a temporary order under S. 144, stopping a procession. A party against whom an order is passed in proceeding under S. 145 has to go to the Civil Court and cannot, unless he does so, be heard to repeat his claim in the Criminal Court. The position when an order is passed under S. 144 is quite different; such an order decides nothing about the respective rights of the parties and may be no more than an interference with private rights required in a temporary emergency. To repeat such an order on the ground of maintaining the status quo is to compel the unsuccessful party to resort to the Civil Court even though the Criminal Court may have done nothing to look into the rights of the parties, and further, indirectly to prolong the effect of the original order beyond the period of two months fixed in Sub-s. (6) of the section. Such a use of the section is altogether unwarrantable. It is not open to a Magistrate by passing repeated orders under S. 144, to avoid the decision of a dispute which may be appropriately dealt with under S. 145 or S. 107, and the power given by S. 144 is essentially an emergent power which has sometime to be passed in disregard of private rights. An order of that kind cannot possibly be allowed by repetition to spell a more or less permanent interference with private rights. F. E. Chrestien v. Carter. 40 Cr. L. J. 895 :

In a country which enjoys liberty of the press, a person is entitled in his newspaper to publish any news, and make any comments, which he chooses, provided that he does not infringe any provision of law. A Magistrate acting under S. 144 may no doubt restrict that liberty. But he should only do so if the facts clearly make such restriction necessary in the public interest, and he should not impose any restriction which goes beyond the requirement of the case. Magistrate forbidding under S. 144 a newspaper from publishing certain news, must say in precise and definite language what it is that he is directing the person to abstain from doing by the order made under S. 144, and to say that he is to refrain from doing something which a third party does not approve is not an order which complies with the section. It is for the Magistrate himself, and not for the Public Relations Officer to say what is the character of the publication which is forbidden. The delegation of his discretion to another officer is illegal. In re : Ardeshir Phirozshah Murzban. 41 Cr. L. J. 319 :

—Ss. 144, 147, 439—Revision—High Court, power of, to direct Subordinate Magistrate to take additional evidence—Order prohibiting use of public street, interference with—Sentimental caste objections, if to be considered.

Per Sadasiva Aiyar and Philips, J.J.—A High Court under S. 439, Cr. P. C. or under S. 15, Charter Act, has power to direct a Subordinate Magistrate to take additional evidence, but it must, on that evidence, come to an independent finding itself and not accept the one arrived at by the Magistrate. It is undesirable that orders passed under S. 147, Cr. P. C. should be interfered with in revision under S. 439, Cr. P. C. or S. 15, Charter Act, unless they are made without jurisdiction or are obviously unreasonable and unjust. Per Sadasiva Aiyar, J.—A Magistrate has jurisdiction under S. 147, Cr. P. C. to pass orders even against the right of passage through a public street. But he ought not to pass such a prohibitory order unless it is clearly proved that there is a right by custom or by grant or by Statute in one section of the public to prevent another section of the public from using the public street on particular occasions or for particular purposes, when such use is ordinarily and prima facie lawful. Sentimental caste objections to use of a public street should not be countenanced by Magistrates acting under S. 147, though they can, in emergent cases, pass temporary orders under S. 144 when the preservation of the peace is required. Even in such cases, the temporary nature of the order cannot be attempted to be changed by continued renewals. Sudalaimathu Chettiar v. Enan Samban. 16 Cr. L. J. 767 :

An order under S. 144 does not fall within the scope of S. 435 and can only be revised by High Court under S. 107, Government of

India Act. But it is only in very rare cases that the High Court will interfere under that section. It would interfere only if very great miscarriage of justice would otherwise result. Where, an order under S. 144 specifies no time during which it is to be in force, the reasonable presumption is that the order would operate for two months and not for an indefinite time. Under S. 144 (3) an order may be directed to the public generally when frequenting or visiting a particular place, but it cannot be directed to the public indefinitely. An order addressed to "all and sundry" frequenting or visiting a particular temple merely means "all and sundry persons who frequent or visit that temple during the course of the two months next following the order." Ponnappa Aiyangar v. Sri Vanamamalai.

A High Court will not decline to revise an order, passed under S. 144, Cr. P. C., after the expiry of two months from the date of the order. It will examine the order to see whether it was passed with or without jurisdiction, and, if in its opinion it is a wrong order, it will express its views about it. An order under S. 144, Cr. P. C., which is indefinite as to time and which prohibits a party from doing a certain act until the question in dispute is settled by a Civil Court, is in effect a perpetual injunction, and is, therefore, without jurisdiction. The word "alter" in S. 144 (4) does not mean substituting the name of one party for that of the other. Muthukumaraswami Nadar v. Muhammad Rozeher. 23 Cr. L. J. 404 :

Where a second order under S. 144 does not state that there has been again a temporary emergency and a continuing or existing insufficiency of the police force to protect the petitioners in the exercise of their right, it is illegal and liable to be set aside in revision. *Gorinda Chetti v. ———S. 144—Scope of—Ex parte order, legality of—Holding hat on one's own property—Breach of peace—Proper procedure.

Every person is ordinarily entitled to exercise all rights of ownership on his property and the holding of a hat on one's own property is not in itself a wrongful act. Criminal Court assumes jurisdiction to interfere with this lawful exercise of a person's right of ownership, when such exercise in its ulterior consequences, and being directed primarily against the lawful exercise of another person's right of ownership, is likely to cause a breach of the peace. An order, prohibiting a party from ever holding a hat at any place on his own property is not competent under S. 144. It is not proper for a Magistrate to pass an ex parte order under S. 144, and, when its propriety or legality is challenged, to postpone the hearing of the matter from time to time until about the termination of the force of the order. Such matters ought to be disposed of quickly in order to avoid unnecessarily encroaching on the civil rights and liberties of the subject. Banawari Lal Ram v. Pronab Krishna Majumdar.

Cr. P. CODE (1898), S. 144

S. 144 does not authorize a Magistrate to pass any mandatory order. All that the Magistrate can do is to direct any person to abstain from a certain act or to take certain order with certain property in his possession or under his management. In other words, the section empowers a Magistrate to pass a restrictive order. Hence a Magistrate cannot direct a person who has taken possession of the disputed land and erected fence round it, to remove the fence. Bimala Kanta Bagchi v. Sant Kumar Ghosh.

S. 144 (4) is not confined to cases where there has been a change of circumstances since the original order was made, and, although a Magistrate ought not to interfere with an order once made under the section unless very good reasons are disclosed for doing so, he may rescind such an order, if he is satisfied that it ought never to have been made. Per Mullick, J.—S. 144 is of general application and contains nothing which ousts the Magistrate's jurisdiction in cases of bona fide dispute as to possession of land. But where S. 107 or S. 145 will meet the requirements of the case, S. 144 is not an appropriate remedy, and ought not be used as a substitute for those sections. The words “alter or rescind” in S. 144 (4) empower a District Magistrate to modify or cancel an order under that section upon any ground whatsoever. Per Jwala Prasad, J.—When one party is clearly in the wrong and threatens to usurp the rights of another who is in actual possession of the land in dispute, the proper remedy is an order under S. 144, or S. 107. Where in a proceeding under S. 144, a Magistrate comes to the conclusion that there is a bona fide dispute as to the possession of the parties, then he is bound to start an enquiry under S. 145 either in continuation of his order under S. 144 or in supersession thereof, for S. 145 is the only section under which an enquiry in the case of a danger of a breach of the peace concerning a dispute as to land can be made. The words “rescind or alter” in cl. (4) of S. 144 are wide enough to vest the Magistrates mentioned in that clause with unlimited power to deal with an order passed under cl. (1) of the section on the question of jurisdiction as well as upon the merits. Shebalak Singh v. Kamar-ud-Din Mandai.

The proper proceeding to be adopted when there is a dispute concerning land or water which is likely to cause a breach of the peace is a proceeding under S. 145 and not a proceeding under S. 144. A proceeding under S. 144 has nothing to do with the question of possession of the parties. It relates only to temporary order in emergent cases of apprehended danger. S. 115, on the other hand, relates to a dispute concerning land or water that may be likely to cause a breach of the peace. It is quite open to a Magistrate, after a final order under S. 144 has been passed, to draw up proceedings under S. 145. Jhama Mahuon v. Thakuri Mahton.

—Ss. 144, 145—Scope of.

The provisions of S. 145 were enacted with the specific intention of definitely settling a quarrel after a fair hearing of each side, and proceedings under S. 144 should not be substituted for proceedings under S. 115 in order to evade the provisions of law which require an inquiry into the question of possession with reference to the evidence adduced by the parties. The use of S. 144 is a suitable method of avoiding a breach of the peace only if it is clear upon a reading of the Police report that the claim of the party creating the disturbance is not a claim made in good faith. Where, however, the facts on the record clearly indicate that a proceeding under S. 115 is necessary, the Magistrate has no jurisdiction to take action under S. 144. Kamiz Amina v. Emperor.

A Magistrate has power under S. 144, to issue a notice, prohibiting the holding of a new market on the same day as the old market is held, in order to prevent a breach of the peace but he has no power, under the section to pass a general order restraining the holding of a hat or market. A disobedience of a valid order under S. 144, is punishable under S. 188, Penal Code, prosecution for which might be started either by sanction given under S. 195 or by an order passed under S. 476, but disobedience itself is not punishable under the said section unless that disobedience causes or tends to cause obstruction, annoyance or injury to any person lawfully employed. A Court in giving directions for the prosecution under S. 188, Penal Code, is bound to find that there was a prima facie case with respect to all elements which are essential to constitute the offence with respect to which the order under S. 476 is passed. An order which does not set forth all the elements of an offence covered by it is, therefore, without jurisdiction. Parmeshwar Rai v. Emperor. 23 Cr. L. J. 381 :

(3) of S. 144 has nothing to do with the nature of the order but is one of four sub-sections which refer to the manner of promulgation and to the duration of an order under Sub-s. (1). When because of the number of persons to be directed, it is impracticable for the Magistrate to issue notice to each individual, he can issue an order to the public generally, including besides residents, persons who may frequent or visit a particular place and such order will be effective against each individual to whose knowledge it has come. *Abdul Karim Shorash v. ———S. 144 (3)—Scope—Order to general public, legality of—Particular place, what is.

Sub-s. (3) of S. 144 has nothing to do with the nature of the order, but is merely one of the four sub-sections which refer to the manner of promulgation and to the duration of an order under Sub-s. (1). Where an order is passed under S. 144 to the public generally, prohibiting them from doing certain acts "within the limits of Nawadah Union Committee," the order sufficiently describes a particular place within the meaning of S. 144 (3) when the limits of the Union Committee are clearly and

The jurisdiction conferred by S. 144 (4) is neither appellate nor revisional but is a special one that can be exercised only if the actual terms of the section are strictly satisfied. ———S. 144—Starting of rival business in close proximity to previously established one—Order under S. 144 against person interested in rival business, if can be issued.

A Magistrate, as an emergency measure, has power to stop, by an order under S. 144, the holding of a hat, or the exercise of his rights by a man on his own land. But a man, who holds a hat on his own land, is perfectly entitled to do so and that by itself is not a wrongful act. Competition in trade, unless illegal methods are adopted, is not a wrongful act. When a rival business is started in close proximity to a previously established business the person interested in the latter is bound to object to the former and some sort of strained feeling is inevitable. This by itself is no ground for restraining the new-comer from carrying his trade unless he is doing or is likely to do any wrongful act which may lead to a breach of the peace. In such a case the best course is to prohibit the doing of the wrongful act, or if necessary, to bind down the wrong-doer under S. 107, Cr. P. C. But an order more or less of a permanent nature is not justified under S. 144, Cr. P. C., which is meant for speedy remedy. Rama Barik v. Emperor.

It is only where there is a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace concerning any land or water or boundaries thereof and the dispute requires to be decided on evidence, that resort to S. 145 becomes necessary; and for this purpose the dispute has to be a real dispute and not a mere pretence on behalf of one of the contesting parties. Where A is in possession of the land and continuing it and B is trying to take the possession of the same land and the Police report that there is imminent danger of a breach of the peace an order under S. 144 is proper one as there is no real dispute about possession at all. *Bhuneshwar Prasad v. Where on a petition presented under S. 145 (4) an order is passed which really does not purport to be passed under S. 145 or 144 and does not, in fact, purport to be an order passed in the exercise of any jurisdiction conferred on the Magistrate by any section of the Cr. P. C. or any other provision of law, and the Magistrate did not decide, as a matter of fact, whether this dispute was likely to lead to a breach of the peace or a disturbance of public tranquility, the essential preliminary to assuming jurisdiction thus not being found to exist, his order must be deemed to be an order having no legal force, and any expression of opinion contained therein must be deemed to be void of legal force or effect. In such circumstances, there is no order which requires to be formally set aside or modified in revision, the order complained of being one which has really no legal force or effect. But such an order must necessarily prejudice a party and it is not at all desirable that the Magistrate who has jurisdiction should omit to exercise his jurisdiction in the manner prescribed by law, but on the other hand, proceed to deal with it in a way not contemplated by the law. *Vattathara S. ———Ss. 144, 145—Police report and sketch, evidentiary value of—Orders under S. 144, how far evidence of possession—Evidence—Admission of documents without objection—Evidentiary value, whether may be challenged subsequently.

An order under S. 144 could only refer to a point of time when it was passed and cannot show who was in possession when the statutory period during which that order remained operative was at an end. A judgment of a Criminal Court in which a person was acquitted and in which it was incidentally found that he was in possession, can only be evidence of the fact that there was such a case and that it ended in such acquittal; the finding on the question of possession which is a ground of such acquittal can hardly be any evidence in subsequent proceedings between the parties with regard to the property in dispute. The only legitimate use to which a Police report and sketch prepared in connection with proceedings under S. 145 could be put is to treat them as the basis of the proceedings and as affording materials for determining the likelihood of breach of the peace and of the identity of the subject-matter of the dispute and of the disputing parties. The fact evidenced thereby, of the Sub-Inspector having seen the parties in possession of certain plots, cannot be treated as evidence of possession. The fact that such documents were admitted without objection does not prevent their admissibility as evidence of possession being challenged subsequently, the question being not a mere question of mode of proof but a question of the evidentiary value of their contents. Shashi Mukhi Debi v. Sarat Chandra Chakravarty.

It is only when possession is either undisputed or clear beyond any shadow of doubt that S. 144 applies. Where the possession is disputed, the section has no application, the effective and proper section is S. 145. A Magistrate has no jurisdiction to pass, under S. 144, an order which amounts to an ejectment decree of a Civil Court. Where an order made by a Magistrate under S. 144 (1) is such as the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to make, the order cannot be set aside under Sub-s. (4) of that section. Such ultra vires orders can be set aside only by a High Court in revision. Madan Lal v. Emperor. 22 Cr. L. J. 685 : 63 I. C. 621 : 2 P. L. T. 484 : A. I. R. 1921 Pat. 392.

———S. 144 (3)—Lahore District if "particular place"—Order relating to such District—Legality.

District of Lahore is a particular place within the meaning of S. 144 (3). The fact that the order forbade meetings in so large a place as the Lahore District, does not make the order 'illegal' although it might have made the order difficult to enforce for one reason or another. Abdul Karim Shorahs v. Emperor. 38 Cr. L. J. 354 (b) : 167 I. C. 284 : 17 Lah. 515 : 38 P. L. R. 964 : 9 R. L. 474 : A. I. R. 1937 Lah. 80.

———S. 144 (3)—Particular place, meaning of—Prohibitory order against public, legality of. Frequenting of "particular place" whether prohibited.

The expression 'a particular place' is sufficiently wide to include the whole district over which a Magistrate may have jurisdiction. But the public who can be affected by a prohibitory order of this nature must consist of those who ordinarily frequent or visit or have occasion to frequent or visit the district as a whole or some place within the district. The law does not contemplate the prohibition of the frequenting or visiting of the 'particular place' to which reference is made in Sub-s. (3) but the prohibition of some act on an occasion on which such place is frequented or visited. Abu Husain Sheikh v. Emperor. 41 Cr. L. J. 864 : 190 I. C. 228 : 44 C. W. N. 641 : I. L. ———S. 144 (4)—District Magistrate, power of, to alter order made by Magistrate subordinate to him, extent of.

S. 144 (4) contemplates only a change in the nature of the order made and not a change in the party against whom it is made. A District Magistrate has, therefore, no power under this clause to set aside an order made by a Magistrate against one party and to substitute therefor a similar order against the other party. *Ganpat Singh v. Where it is a question of dividing a hitherto undivided share, S. 145 may not apply, but where it is a question of rent and it so appears that the rent is half the share of the produce, but there is no question of shares as between the two parties to the proceeding, S. 145 applies. It is true that when it has been found that the contesting parties are actually in joint possession, no order should be made under S. 145. The mere fact that the other party sets up a title to joint possession does not then render S. 145 inapplicable. In an inquiry under S. 145 it is in the discretion of the Magistrate to allow witnesses to be re-summoned upon a petition presented towards the end of his inquiry. A dispute as to a right to collect rents is a dispute within the operation of S. 145. Where the dispute is between the members of a Muhammadan family who claim fractional shares in the properties of the family, only that person can be said to be in actual possession within the meaning of S. 145 who is in actual receipt of rent and to whom the tenants pay such rent. Where more than two months have elapsed from the date of the death of the last person in possession, there is no 'forcible dispossession,' within two months within the meaning of S. 145. Disputes with regard to the management of a temple and the right to the performance of puja therein are not disputes of the kind to which S. 147 applies as the words 'land or water' in that section are used in their ordinary significance without the extended meaning assigned to them in S. 145 (2). As a temple is a 'building' within the meaning of S. 145 (2), a dispute as to the possession of a temple and for such indicia of his possession as the holding of its key is cognizable by a Magistrate under S. 145. Where a dispute is in effect for possession of the temple and the right to perform pūja there is only a portion of the larger relief claimed, a Magistrate can deal with it under S. 145. An order as to possession subject to reservations is not forbidden by S. 145 (6). It is competent, therefore, for a Magistrate, while upholding one party's possession of a temple, to direct by his order that the opposite party be allowed to enter the temple and perform pūja to one of the idols therein without adopting the stringent procedure of attaching the temple under S. 146. *Palaniyandi Pandaram v. On the death, therefore, of the petitioner, pending disposal of revision-petition in the High Court under the Charter Act against an order passed under S. 145, the proceedings abate and his son will not be permitted to be brought on the record to prosecute it. The High Court will not deal, in revision, with the Magistrate's order suo motu when the Magistrate has complied with all the formalities essential to his having jurisdiction. *Subbaraju v. the Magistrate may be satisfied of the existence of a likelihood of a breach of peace, he must form his own judgment and not proceed upon a mere expression of opinion by the Police. To take proceeding under S. 145 it is enough that a breach of the peace is likely; it is not necessary that it should be imminent. If the Police report is defective, it is not obligatory upon the High Court to interfere, when it is proved at the trial that a breach of the peace was likely at the date of the initial order. The question of possession in a proceeding under S. 145 has to be determined with reference to a special point of time: upon this question every previous decree of a Civil Court or other order of a Criminal Court is not necessarily conclusive; the evidentiary value to be attached to such document must depend upon the circumstances of each particular case. *Kulada Kinkar Roy v. —————Ss. 145, 439—Compromise—Proceeding under S. 145—Compromise—Breach—Continuation of proceedings—Irregularity—Revision.

During the course of a proceedings under S. 145 the parties entered into a compromise whereby it was agreed that the first party would continue in possession of the property in dispute. The Court, thereupon, consigned record to the record-room. A few days after, the first party appeared before the Court and filed a petition complaining that the second party had dispossessed him from a portion of the property in dispute and threatened to use violence. The Magistrate thereupon revived the proceedings and finally passed an order confirming the possession of the first party: Held, that there was no grave irregularity in the proceedings or final order of the Magistrate which justified interference in revision. Khushalgi v. Jamnagar. 23 Cr. L. J. 724 :

The parties to a proceeding under S. 145 compromised and filed a petition of compromise, and according to its terms, the Magistrate ordered that the lands would be in the possession of both sides as stated in the petition: Held, that the order fell under Cl. 5 of S. 145 and not one under cl. 6 and that, therefore, a subsequent proceeding instituted under S. 145 between the parties in respect of the same lands, is not one made without jurisdiction. *Sadhu Biswas v. In a proceeding under S. 145 the Magistrate has no right to compel a party who has obtained a decree from the Civil Court in respect of the property in dispute to go back to the Civil Court and get something else. The Civil Court would refuse to entertain his suit, the matter being res judicata. A Magistrate, purporting to act under S. 145 but without complying with the provisions of that section, passed an order to the effect that from an order issued by the Collector, it was clear that A was in possession of certain land and that B was not to interfere with that possession. On the very next day, A complained to the Magistrate that his order had been disregarded. The Magistrate found that B had interfered with the possession of A and hence under S. 188 of the Penal Code, he sentenced B to imprisonment for one month: Held, that the order purporting to have been passed under S. 145 was illegal, as there had been no proper inquiry regarding the existing possession of the parties, and, therefore, the conviction under S. 188 of the Penal Code could not be upheld. *Mst. ———S. 145—Duty of Magistrate—Proceedings under—Likelihood of breach of peace—Magistrate, duty of.

In order to assume jurisdiction under S. 145 a Magistrate has to satisfy himself about the likelihood of a breach of the peace. He must exercise his own judgment upon materials placed before him and must arrive at a conclusion as to whether there is a likelihood of a breach of the peace. He would not be justified in acting merely upon the expression of an opinion by the Police, and if by exercising his own independent judgment, he comes to the conclusion that there is a likelihood of a breach of the peace, it is his duty to assume jurisdiction although the Police is of opinion that there is no such likelihood. If, in the proceedings so drawn up, a reference is made to the Police report or to the petition of a party and these documents state that there is no likelihood of a breach of the peace that circumstance will not by itself take away the jurisdiction of the Magistrate to initiate proceedings, if he is satisfied that there is a likelihood of the

If a party fails to put in a written statement that would not take away the jurisdiction of the Magistrate to proceed with the case. In a dispute under S. 145 a High Court has no right to interfere on the merits so long as the Magistrate is acting within his own jurisdiction. To enable a Magistrate to make an order relating to disputes about immovable property, he must, in accordance with S. 145, first make an order in writing stating the grounds of his being satisfied that a dispute exists likely to cause a breach of the peace. Therefore, where a Magistrate, purporting to act under S. 145 merely states in his order that the report of the Police will show that the dispute is not likely to subside until an order is made, it does not amount to a finding that he is satisfied that there is likely to be a breach of the peace and his order is not in conformity with S. 145 (1) of the Code. To entitle a Magistrate to make an order of attachment, he must decide either that none of the parties was in possession as defined by S. 145 or that he is unable to satisfy himself as to which of them was. Therefore, an order of attachment made without one or other of these findings is an order made without jurisdiction and a High Court can interfere with such an order under S. 107 of the Government of India Act, though not under S. 435, Cr. Where a person makes an application under S. 145 alleging that he is in possession of the land in question, it is the duty of the Magistrate to decide whether or not he is or has been recently in actual possession. The mere fact that the revenue records show that the holding is joint is not sufficient to stop the enquiry contemplated by S. 145. In proceedings under this section it is incumbent on the Magistrate to examine the parties and to take evidence. S. 145 applies to a case where the dispute is between co-sharers, each claiming to be in possession of the disputed land to the exclusion of the others; sub-section (b) does not render the section inapplicable to a case in which the parties are jointly entitled to the land in question. Where a Magistrate refuses to take action under S. 145 merely on the ground that the parties are jointly entitled to the land in question, a High Court has jurisdiction to interfere in revision where such irregularity has been committed. *Malan v. What a Magistrate has to look to in a case under S. 145, is the question of actual possession. Cl. (4) of that section lays down that he has to decide the question without reference to the merits of the claims of any of the parties to a right to possess the subject-matter of the dispute. Where a Magistrate in deciding a case under S. 145, refers to such merits, he exceeds his jurisdiction. Ram Dayal v. Kidarnath.

It is essential that the facts and grounds of his being so satisfied should appear in his first order directing the issue of notice, and the grounds must be such as to satisfy a Court of Revision before which the case may be brought by any of the parties concerned. The order of a Magistrate under S. 145 is not ultra vires, though made without making any enquiry as to possession when the party against whom the order is made admits the possession of the opposite party. S. 28 and Art. 47 of Sch. II of the Limitation Act apply to a suit brought to set aside such an order. Gangadharam Aiyar v. Sankarappa Naidu.

———S. 145—Enquiry, proceedings under—Enquiry as to possession—Duty of Magistrate.

Before making an order under S. 145, the Magistrate must comply with the provisions of Chap. XII of the Code and must himself make an enquiry. Therefore an order based on the report of Zaildar is illegal. Yar Ali Shah v. Rahim Shah. 21 Cr. L. J. 563 : 57 I. C. 83 : A. I. R. 1920 Lah. 114.

———S. 145—Enquiry, proceedings under—Necessity of inquiry—Omission to record reasons, effect of.

S. 145 is a mandatory and if a Magistrate has reason to believe that a dispute as to land is likely to lead to a breach of the peace, he is bound to take action to prevent such a breach arising by placing one or other of the parties in possession and forbidding the other disturbance of such possession. It is only right and proper in order to avoid hasty action that a Magistrate should be required to state the grounds of his belief as to the necessity of an inquiry. But where the inquiry proves that there is a dispute which may lead to bloodshed, and when the Magistrate has taken effectively steps under S. 145 to abate temporarily the cause of dispute, his order cannot be set aside merely because he omitted to put in writing the grounds which caused him to take action. Disobedience of a mandatory and directory order does not, as a general rule, render proceedings null and void unless it can be proved that injustice has been done to any party as a result of that omission: Maung Pu v. Maung Chit Pyu.

An enquiry under S. 145 of the Cr. P. C. must be directed to the decision of the absolute continuing possession of either party of the subject-matter of dispute. A hal which is held on one day of a week is not a proper subject-matter for proceedings under S. 145 between the proprietor thereof and the stall-holders where the latter do not lay any claim to actual possession of any stall for the other days in each week. Under such circumstances an order of the Magistrate under S. 145 declaring the stall-holders to be in possession of the stalls is without jurisdiction. In proceedings under S. 145 the element of continuity, is an ingredient which is necessary, at any rate, in case where interruption is not due to seasonal variations. Nayan Manjuri Dasi v. Farley Huq Sardar. 24 Cr. L. J. 175 : 71 I. C. 527 : 49 Cal. 871 : A. I. R. 1922 Cal. 502.

———S. 145—Enquiry under S. 145, scope of.

———Ss. 145, 147—Enquiry under S. 147—Procedure—Order passed without giving parties opportunity to produce evidence, legality of—Jurisdiction—Order affecting persons not parties to proceedings.

An inquiry under S. 147 has to be made in the manner provided by S. 145 and the Magistrate conducting such enquiry must receive the evidence of the parties. Failure to give an opportunity to the parties of calling evidence affects the jurisdiction of the Magistrate. S. 147 contemplates an order to be passed between parties to the proceedings only. An order effecting persons who are not parties to the proceedings is liable to be set aside as affecting jurisdiction. Pilaji v. Darya.

—S. 145—Enquiry under Sub-s. (1).

Sub-s. (1) of S. 145 does not contemplate any sustained inquiry before the making of the preliminary order. It is in the highest degree absurd for a Magistrate to delay the passing of a preliminary order while he undertakes a prolonged inquiry extending over several hearings. *Muhammad Ali Yar Muhammad v. —S. 145—Enquiry under Sub-s. (4) whether obligatory after passing order under Sub-s. (1)—Order under Sub-s. (6) if must follow subsequently.

Sub-ss. (1), (4), (5) and (6) of S. 145 are complementary. Once an order has been passed under Sub-s. (1), it is obligatory for a Magistrate to make the inquiry provided for in Sub-s. (4) subject only to the obligation under Sub-s. (5) to terminate the proceeding in the circumstances therein contemplated. The words of Sub-s. (4) "the Magistrate shall then....." are mandatory. The word 'then' refers to the stage when in compliance with the order under Sub-s. (1) the parties have put in their written statements and attended the Court. On the completion of the inquiry under Sub-s. (4) a final order under Sub-s. (6) must follow, it being obvious that the holding of the said inquiry is a condition precedent to the making of the order under Sub-s. (6). An order under Sub-s. (6) cannot be made without having held any inquiry under Sub-s. (4). Muhammad Ali Yar Muhammad v. Shamsul Haq Pir Zialdin Shah.

Where in an inquiry under S. 145, the Magistrate in his preliminary order has specifically found that the dispute was likely to cause a breach of the peace, it is not necessary for the Magistrate to repeat in the final order, that such an apprehension existed. Once a prelimi-

The jurisdiction of a Magistrate under Chapter XII of the Cr. P. C. is solely based on the imminence of a breach of the peace. What the Crown and the parties want is decision as to their present rights and a decision which will be effectual to prevent a breach of the peace.

Cr. P. CODE (1898), S. 145

Where during the pendency of proceedings under S. 137 the parties refer their dispute to arbitration and the proceedings are stayed, it is not open to the Magistrate to continue the proceedings under S. 147 after the arbitration proceedings become ineffectual without any allegation of likelihood of breach of peace after the arbitration proceedings ceased. *Kalanand Singh v. Once proceedings with regard to land have been taken under S. 145, and possession declared, then it is the duty of Criminal Courts to uphold that order and not to enter upon any further inquiry under that section. Once an order of the Magistrate has been made as regards a plot of land, then it is for the person, whether he be a party to the proceedings or not, who disputes that possession to take proceedings in a Civil Court. It is the duty of the Magistrate to uphold an order which has been made under S. 145, and for that purpose, if necessary, to bind over persons who interfere with the possession under S. 107 or any other provision of the Cr. trate—Title to possession, joint or separate, foreign to inquiry.

The question whether the parties have a joint title to the land is one which the Magistrate cannot investigate under S. 145. The only question for him is whether either party has actual possession of a defined area, and the other party has not, he can make an order irrespective of the titles of the parties. Co-sharers in an estate may by express or tacit agreement be each separately in actual possession of specified and demarcated portions of the estate. In that case there is nothing to prevent application of S. 145. —S. 145—Jurisdiction—Order based on Police report—Interference by High Court—Jurisdiction—Possession at date of order—Finding not specific—Order, construction of.

A Magistrate gets jurisdiction to take action under S. 145, if he believes the Police report as to the likelihood of a breach of the peace. He need not assign further reasons. An order merely declaring a party in possession, though not a specific compliance with the provisions of S. 145 (1), may be construed as declaring the possession at the date of the order, if each party was only contending for its own possession at the date of the order and previous to it. The High Court will not examine the grounds of the Magistrate's order where it was passed to check an imminent danger and in the interests of the public peace. Krishnappa Naidu v. Alamelu Ammal.

Prompt preventive action is necessary in cases under Chap. XII of the Cr. P. C. In proceedings under Chap. XII, Cr. P. C., a Magistrate must himself be satisfied of the likelihood of a breach of the peace. He should form his own judgment and not proceed automatically upon the mere opinion of the Police or the direction of some other officer. The fact that the Magistrate is so satisfied and the grounds thereof must, therefore, appear in the first order directing the issue of notice. A Magistrate has no jurisdiction to pass an order under S. 145, in respect of a larger area of land than is included in the proceedings. The critical date for determining the possession of the parties is the date of preliminary order. Emperor v. Ganikhan.

—S. 145—Meaning of words—"Actual," meaning of—Possession through tenants, whether actual—Order, nature of—Person not party, whether bound.

The word "actual" in S. 145 used in relation to possession must be interpreted in the sense of only such possession as the nature of the property is susceptible of. Possession through the exercise of a right of collecting rent from the tenants in possession cannot, from a juristic point of view, be regarded as actual. A person who is not a party either to the proceedings or to the order under S. 145, is entitled to challenge the propriety of it and may even defy it though only by lawful act. An order under S. 145 does not put any one in possession but is merely a declaration of the then existing state of possession on the materials before the Court in those proceedings. *Mahesh Singh v. —Decree of Civil Court in favour of one party—Delivery of possession to such party by Civil Court—Jurisdiction of Criminal Court to take proceedings under S. 145—'Dispute', 'Actual possession,' meaning of.

Held, by the Full Bench (Rankin, C. J. and Suhrawardy, Ghose and Cammiade, JJ.).—The words 'actual possession' in Sub-s. (1) of S. 145 means actual physical possession even though wrongful, e. g., that of a recent trespasser in actual physical possession at the time of the proceedings under S. 145. The word 'dispute' in the same section means actual disagreement existing between the parties at the time of the proceedings under S. 145 even though the question as to the right to possession has already been decided by a Civil Court. Per Mukerjee, J.—The words 'actual possession' in Sub-s. (1) of S. 145 means actual physical possession even though wrongful, e. g., that of a recent trespasser in actual physical possession provided the dispute as to possession has not been determined by a Civil Court. The word 'dispute' in the same section means actual disagreement existing between the parties at the time of the proceedings under S. 145 even though the question as to the right of possession has already been decided by a Civil Court if the decision of the Civil Court amounts only to a determination of the right to possession but not in cases where such right and a consequent claim to possession have been negated by a decree which is either inter partes or may be treated as such and in cases in which khas or actual possession has been delivered by the Civil Court either inter partes or between parties who may in effect be regarded as parties to the proceedings. The first party took a mortgage from M and his wife, and obtained a mortgage-decree against M and the heirs of M's wife. upon an application for execution of the decree it was found that the decree was time-barred as against the minor heirs of M's wife. The property was thereafter sold as against M and purchased by the first party. An application to set aside the sale was dismissed but the question whether the property was owned by M or his wife or as to what their shares in it were was left open. The first party was put in possession by the planting of a bamboo. In proceedings under S. 145 between the first party and the heirs of M's wife about 15 months after the date of the delivery of possession: Held, by the Full Bench: (1) that the Magistrate had jurisdiction to take action under S. 145, in spite of the order of the Civil Court for delivery of possession; (2) that he was not bound in law to find that the applicant was in possession by reason of the delivery of possession given by the Civil Court. *Agni Kumar Das v. —S. 145—Meaning of words—Dispute with regard to immovable property—"Forcibly and wrongfully," meaning of—Order confirming possession, duration of.

Per Martin, J.—The distinction drawn in the first proviso of Sub-s. (4) of S. 145 is between forcible entries which are rightful and forcible entries which are wrongful; and that depends on whether the person entering was entitled to use force, and not merely on whether he had a legal right to possession. Per Pratt, J.—The phrase "forcibly and wrongfully" used in the first proviso to Sub-s. (4) of S. 145 has the same meaning as forcible entry without due warrant of law; in other words "wrongfully" means no more than "otherwise than in due course of law." Possession taken by a show of force is a forcible dispossession within the meaning of the first proviso to Sub-s. (4) of S. 145. Per Fawcett and Madgaokar, JJ.—Sub-s. (6) of S. 145 and the connected form No. 22 of Sch. V to the Code allow a Magistrate to give directions as to possession with a legal effect that is valid until actual eviction or ouster by due course of law and not merely until the institution of a civil suit for the purpose of determining the legal right to the property. *Bai Jiba v. These words afford no scope for holding that in those cases where a Magistrate does not make a preliminary order within two months of the dispossession, the party complaining is still entitled to proceed under S. 145. A party cannot be said to be in possession of land within the meaning of S. 145, when it is the possession claimed through his tenant, i.e. constructive possession. *Penumatsa Ranga Razu of Vempa v. Where the tenants of a village refuse to pay rent to the lawful Lambardar and willingly pay the rent to another, the Lambardar cannot be held to have been forcibly and wrongfully dispossessed and S. 145 (4) cannot be applied to the case. In a proceeding under S. 145 the enquiry is limited to "the fact of actual possession of the subject of dispute," by the parties, and this enquiry is to be without reference to the merits or the claims of any such parties to a right to possess the subject of dispute. Wrongful possession is not necessarily forcible dispossession. Ata Husain v. Latif Hussain.

The words "the Magistrate shall hear the parties" S. 145 (4) include the argument on the conclusion of the evidence on both sides, and the refusal of the Magistrate to hear the arguments of the parties vitiates the final order passed as being in excess of jurisdiction. ———S. 145 (4)—Proviso I—Meaning of words—Wrongful dispossession, what is—Forceful possession, meaning of.

For the purposes of the first proviso to Sub-s. (4) of S. 145 dispossession may be wrongful and yet not forcible, and to hold that 'wrongful' connotes absence of right or title would be to defeat the purpose of the section and to require the Magistrate to enter into questions which by the section itself are expressly excluded from his consideration. A dispossession otherwise than in due course of law is wrongful. It is not necessary that actual force or violence should have been used to some person or persons before a dispossession can be said to be 'forcible'. When the dispossession is effected by a show of criminal force sufficient to intimidate those in possession and to deter them from resistance, the latter are said to have been forcibly dispossessed. *Sita Nath Saha v. ———S. 145 (6)—Meaning of words—"Due course of law," meaning of.

The phrase "due course of law" in S. 145 (6) does not necessarily mean a decree of a Civil Court, but an order which evicts a party must either be an order of a Civil Court or of a Court acting under statutory authority. In the latter case, there must be a clear indication, express or implied, in the terms of the Statute itself, to show that the order has the effect of a decree. Krishna Deyal Gir v. Nirmal. 18 Cr. None of the parties litigating under S. 145 can be called an accused person and consequently the provisions of S. 342 (4) of the Code, that no oath shall be administered to an accused person, do not prevent their examination on oath. An inquiry under S. 145 is of a quasi-civil nature and neither the procedure of warrant cases nor that of summons cases applies, S. 356, Cr. P. S. 350, Cr. P. C. is in its terms wide enough to cover every trial or enquiry under the Code, and the proceedings under S. 145 is an enquiry. Therefore S. 350 applies wherever a Magistrate has ceased to exercise jurisdiction therein. Anu Sheikh v. Jitu Sheikh. 11 Cr. L. J. 440 (1) : 7 I. C. 54.

———S. 145 (1)—Nature of proceeding—Preliminary order, necessity of recording—Reasons of the rule.

The powers conferred upon Courts by S. 145 are somewhat of an exceptional character because they enable the Magistrate mentioned in the section to partially deal with a matter over which Civil Courts have jurisdiction. Therefore, the requirements of the section must be strictly followed and a Magistrate is bound to make an order in writing giving the grounds of his being satisfied that dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace exists. *Dhaniram v. A proceeding under S. 145 is binding on the whole world. Under clause (3) of the section, the order initiating the proceeding is to be published by a copy of it being affixed to some conspicuous place at or near the subject-matter of the dispute. This provision is intended to give notice to all persons interested in the subject-matter of the dispute to come forward and be made parties to the proceeding. Therefore, when the proceeding is over, the question of possession is, so far as the Magistrate is concerned, set at rest once for all, and thereafter he should maintain the order by taking action under Ss. 107 and 144 of the Code, as the case may be, against persons interfering with the possession of the party declared to be in possession whether or not they were parties to the proceeding under S. 145. *Raghunandan Pandey v. provisions of Sub-s. 1 of the section have been complied with. The object of publishing a notice on the subject of dispute is to reach all persons interested therein and unless it to be shown that some one interested has been materially prejudiced by the omission to serve the notice, the High Court ought not to interfere under S. 15 of the Charter Act. The omission to publish a notice under S. 145 (3), at some conspicuous place at or near the subject of dispute is not an illegality which deprives the Magistrate of his jurisdiction. The power of interference under S. 45, Charter Act, is discretionary and ought, in relation to cases under S. 145, Cr. P. C., to be exercised with every caution. If the Subordinate Court has proceeded with irregularity, the High Court will not interfere unless some one has been materially prejudiced thereby : If, however, the Subordinate Court has acted without jurisdiction, the High Court will interfere. The term 'then' in Sub-s. 4, S. 145, Cr. P. C., has reference only to the time or order of the Magistrate's proceedings. Sukh Lal Sheikh v. Tara Chand Ta. 2 Cr. L. J. 618 : 2 C. L. J. 241 : I. L. —S. 145—Object—Dispute as to management of property—Magistrate, jurisdiction of.

The object of S. 145 is limited strictly to the prevention of violent self-help even by a true owner. The provisions of the section belong to the criminal and not to the civil law and should not be resorted to unless there is in fact a real apprehension of occurrence of offences against the public order. Under S. 145, the question in each case will be, first, whether the dispute is a dispute concerning land or water or the boundaries thereof, within the meaning of the section, and secondly, whether the acts found to have been exercised are such as to justify a finding of possession. The mere fact that the word management is used to describe the acts of possession which each party claims to have exercised would not exclude the jurisdiction of the Magistrate. Ghasi Ram v. Amrit Lal. 13 Cr. L. J. 858 :

—S. 145—Object—Joint possession.

The actual purport of S. 145 is to declare possession with the sole object of avoiding breach of peace. But when both parties are in joint possession, to declare them so to be in possession is contrary to the object of S. 145, as such an order would, in no way, be conducive to public tranquility. The proper procedure in such a case would be to take action under S. 107, Cr. P. C., against the party intending to oust the other's possession. Larman Appa v. Gannsingh. 17 N. L. J. 216 :

—S. 145—Object—Likely—Imminent or probable—Discretion of Magistrate in fit cases.

Per Lucas, J. C., and Crouch, A. J. C., (Pratt A. J. C., dissenting)—(1) The word "likely" in S. 145, does not imply that the breach of the peace complained of must be imminent or likely to happen immediately. It simply denotes, that there should be a probability or likelihood of a breach of the peace; (2) The intention of a Legislature in enacting this section clearly was to leave it to the Magistrate's discretion to determine whether or not the conditions precedent to the exercise of his jurisdiction, as laid down in the section, had arisen, but where he held that such conditions did exist, he had no option of refusing to exercise his jurisdiction. The word "shall" cannot be interpreted to give the Magistrate discretion to refuse to act when the conditions precedent to the exercise of his jurisdiction have been complied with. Balmukund Jaganath v. Emperor. 8 Cr. L. J. 170 :

—S. 146—Object—Magistrate discharging parties claiming to be in possession on the ground that they claim only as tenants—Legality of—Tenants in possession, if necessary parties to dispute under S. 145.

The essence of proceedings under S. 145 is the determination of the question as to who is in possession. Although a Magistrate is entitled to rescind a preliminary order under S. 145 if he is satisfied that no likelihood of a breach of the peace exists, but in discharging parties to the proceedings who claim to be in possession on the ground that they claim to be in possession as tenants only and are, therefore, not necessary parties, the Magistrate is acting with great irregularity and in a manner not contemplated by the provisions of the section. He is in fact envisaging a decision on the question who has the right to possession, which is a matter for a Civil Court and not for a Criminal Court at all. To say that tenants in possession are not necessary parties is to preclude persons who claim to be in possession from giving evidence that they are in possession. Nagarmal

—S. 145—Object of—Breach of peace, apprehension of—Possession—Title, inquiry as to.

The object of the provision contained in S. 145 is to bring to an end by a summary process disputes relating to land, which are in their nature likely, if not suppressed, to end in breaches of the peace. The mere circumstance that the dispute is one of a religious nature is not sufficient to justify a Magistrate to take action under S. 145. There must be positive evidence on the record that a breach of the peace is likely to occur if proceedings under the section are not taken. S. 145 is concerned solely with the fact of actual physical possession whether lawful or unlawful, and questions as to title are quite irrelevant and entirely outside the scope of the section. *Bhagwan Das v. —S. 145—Object of—Factum of possession—Magistrate, whether can refer to other proceeding.

An order under S. 145 is made for the purpose of keeping the peace pending the parties' legitimate appeal to the Civil Tribunal, and should not be lightly disturbed. A Magistrate when adjudicating upon the factum of possession under this section, should not concern himself with other proceedings pending before himself but should confine himself to the actual evidence adduced by the parties. In re : Lingaraja Misro. 17 Cr. Proceeding under S. 145 can be started in a case in which one party claims exclusive possession while another party claims to be in joint possession along with them as the question in such a case is no less a question of disputed actual possession than if each party claimed exclusive possession of the entire area. *Zafar Ahsan v. of the peace by deciding which party is to remain on the land and which party is to seek his remedy in the Civil Court. Breaches of the peace will continue, and the object of the Legislature will be frustrated if the party who is not in possession, is allowed to interfere with the possession of the successful party and to plead once more that whatever the order might have been, he is still in possession or has been able to regain possession by force, and thus either compel the successful party to go to the Civil Court or to coerce a Magistrate to proceed again under S. 145. *Ambika Thakur v. Per Cuming, J. (Graham, J. dubitante.)—An order under S. 145 is only a piece of evidence to be taken into consideration when the question of possession arises between the parties on a subsequent occasion and though it would go to show that the party in whose favour it was passed was in possession on the date of the order, it is open to the other party to prove that, in spite of the order, he was actually in possession or regained possession after the order. —S. 145—Object of—Preservation of peace—Process fees, payment of—Protection of property—Use of force—Recovery of property—Police report.

The sole object of S. 145 is to prevent an imminent breach of peace and a decision in regard to it, right or wrong, must be made at once; the protection or maintenance of anybody's possession is not one of the objects of the section. Under S. 145 the Magistrate takes action on behalf of the Crown on a report made to him, against all other parties concerned and all processes should issue at Government expense and the parties originally mentioned and any others that may come in later should be ranged on one side as the first party and the second party and so on. Any person is entitled to use force within limits for the protection of his property against forcible invasion and also to say that he intends to do so in the event of an apprehended forcible invasion being made. But he has no right to use force for the recovery of his property, and must go to a Civil Court to regain possession or to get his possession confirmed. It is a safe general rule for a Magistrate to refuse to take action at all under S. 145 except on a report from the Police which should not be a mere forwarding of a report made to the Police by one of the parties, but a definite statement of opinion by a responsible officer that he apprehends a disturbance which he cannot prevent himself and, therefore, desires the exercise of powers of the Magistrate to prevent it. The absence of such a report is almost conclusive indication of the absence of any likelihood of a breach of the peace. Phulania v. Emperor.

—S. 145—Object of—Proceedings, object of—Portion of property made subject-matter of dispute—Mistake in law—Non-joinder of party—Order giving party more than his claim, validity of—Revision—High Court, interference by.

The purpose of a proceeding under S. 145 is merely to prevent a breach of the peace and if the Magistrate thinks that it is sufficient to prevent a breach of the peace to include in his proceeding only a portion of the land which is the subject of the Police report, there is nothing to prevent him doing so. The rule that if a suit is brought only in respect of a portion of the land claimed, a subsequent suit for the remainder might be barred is not applicable to proceedings under this section. A mistake of law is not a ground upon which the High Court can interfere with proceedings under S. 145 unless the mistake goes to the jurisdiction. Failure to add a party interested in the land in dispute as a party to the proceedings under S. 145 is not a ground for interference by the High Court. A Magistrate goes beyond his jurisdiction if by an order under S. 145 he awards to a party more than that party has claimed, and in such a case, the High Court will interfere with the order. *Mukhal Singh v. —S. 145—Object of—Proceeding under—Decision of Criminal Court, effect of—Proceedings, whether can be stopped.

The object of S. 145 is to finally terminate the dispute between the parties so far as the Criminal Court is concerned, so as to effectively put a stop to any breach of the peace. It is with this object that the decision of the Magistrate under S. 145 is declared to be final and conclusive until it is set aside by a competent Civil Court and the rights of the parties are determined by a competent Court. The existence of a decision incidentally arrived at by a Criminal Court with regard to the possession of any party does not per se cause a cessation of the dispute between the parties as to possession so as to justify a Magistrate before whom a proceeding under S. 145 is pending to put an end to the proceeding. *Abdul Shakur v. —S. 145—Object of—Proceedings under.

The object of S. 145 is to prevent a breach of the peace by a summary decision as to the possession of the contending parties, leaving them to decide their title and right to possession in a competent Civil Court. It is incumbent upon Magistrates to dispose of proceedings under S. 145 as quickly as possible and with due regard to the rules of procedure prescribed by that self-contained section. The procedure for the trial of a case under this section is that laid down for the trial of summons-cases. Moti Singh v. Dhanukdhari Singh.

—S. 145—Object of—Summary remedy—Speedy disposal—Necessity—Procedure.

The idea of S. 145 is that it is a short and summary manner of awarding possession until other cases connected with the subject-matter of the suit are decided. It is S. 145 case that has got to be finished quickly in order that there may not be breach of the peace until the other cases whose order may overrule S. 145 decision may be brought to a close. *Ma Nyain Mya v. —Ss. 145, 147—Object—Proceedings—Nature of—Dispute between two communities over a well—Procedure.

An order under Ch. XII of the Cr. P. C., is more or less an executive order and it is designed to avoid a breach of the peace. Where there is a dispute between two communities and proceedings are taken under S. 145, the Magistrate is justified in selecting persons who should represent each community, and after hearing whom, he should either permit a community to do a certain thing or to prevent from doing it till a Civil Court has decided upon the rights of the parties. A well is not such a property as can be said to be in the exclusive possession of any one particular person so long as the public or a part of it is allowed access to it. Where it is admitted that a particular community has been using a well, and the question for decision before a Magistrate is whether another community has also a right to use the same, the proceedings should be under S. 147 and not under S. 145. Nanhe Mal v. Jamil ur-Rahman.

—Ss. 145, 439—Object of—Order under S. 145, defective—Both parties cognizant of the facts in dispute—Danger of a breach of the peace—Jurisdiction—Revision.

The only object of causing the Magistrate to set forth his reasons for the initial order, under S. 145 is to enable the parties to know what case they have to meet. Therefore where both parties to proceedings, under the said section, themselves inform a Magistrate that there is a danger of the breach of the peace and the Magistrate acting on that information makes the initial order without recording the reasons in full, his final order is not without jurisdiction, inasmuch as the parties are not prejudiced in any way. *Ganga Saran Singh v. —S. 145 (4)—Object of—Proceedings—Point for determination is actual possession at time of preliminary order.

The only point for determination in proceedings under S. 145 is which party was in possession at the time of the preliminary order. It does not matter whether such possession was wrongful or not. Actual possession is all that matters, subject of course to Proviso 1, Sub-s. (4), S. 145. The Magistrate should not base his order on the respective merits of the claims of the parties to title and thus arrogate to himself functions of the Civil Court. Nag v. Masood Khan.

—S. 145—Order without Notice—Notice relating to land—Minor interested in land, whether essential party—Notice issued to minor, non-service of, effect of—Order, validity of, as against other parties—Prejudice.

A question of misjoinder or non-joinder of parties does not ordinarily affect jurisdiction. Whether a party has been wrongly included or excluded is a question of procedure by which jurisdiction is not affected. Where proceedings are taken under S. 145, a minor who is interested in the property in dispute, although a proper party to the proceedings, is not an essential party inasmuch as he would not be a likely person to cause a breach of the peace. Where service of notice is not properly effected on the minor in such a case, an order passed in the proceedings, although it might be open to objection on behalf of the minor, cannot be said to have been made without jurisdiction so far as the other parties to the proceedings are concerned, if no prejudice has resulted to them owing to the absence of service of notice on the minor. *Nandan Singh v. Possession that can be pleaded in a proceeding under S. 145, must be possession based on a claim of right to possession. The possession of an agent or a servant which is permissive cannot give a party to a proceeding a locus standi as against his principal or master. The possession of one of several co-shebais who for convenience has been entrusted with the sole management of the debutter estate is as regards the shebaiti right of his co-shebais, that of an agent. The agency can be withdrawn. A dispute between such a person claiming sole-management and his co-shebais who have withdrawn the agency and claim to have joint management with him is not a fit subject for a proceeding under S. 145. Debutter property being by nature impartible and inalienable, the possession of co-shebais must necessarily be always joint, and as such, beyond the scope of an order under S. 145. *Nritta Gopal Singh v. Where by an order passed under S. 145, the possession of a party has been once adjudged, the duty of the Magistrate is to see that the unsuccessful party does not disregard the order and disturb the possession without having recourse to law. Therefore, if, instead of maintaining the possession, he initiates fresh proceedings under S. 145, for maintaining the peace, he does not exercise a proper judicial discretion. A Magistrate who attaches the property in dispute under S. 146 without holding a local investigation, cannot be said to have exercised his jurisdiction erroneously. *Upendra Nath Bhattacharjee v. —Ss. 145, 148, 439—Possession of land, dispute as to—Delegation of enquiry to Subordinate Magistrate, scope of—Order final, on evidence partly recorded by Subordinate Magistrate, whether regular—Revision.

Where a 1st class Magistrate passes a final order under S. 148 on evidence partly recorded by a Subordinate Magistrate under his directions and partly recorded by himself, he cannot be deemed to have acted without jurisdiction so as to call for interference by the High Court in revision. The essential requisite to give a Magistrate jurisdiction under S. 145 is that he must be satisfied that a dispute exists likely to cause a breach of the peace concerning land or water or the boundaries thereof. Once he is so satisfied, his jurisdiction is complete and his subsequent action must be considered in relation to procedure, not jurisdiction. An enquiry by a Subordinate Magistrate, to whom a matter is referred under the provisions of S. 145, is not confined to a mere inspection of the locality and a report thereon. Vellanki Srinivasa Jagannadha Rao v. Gopal Krishna Rao. 20 Cr. L. J. 773 : 53 I. C. 613 : 10 L. W. 447 : 37 M. L. J. 589 : A. I. R. 1919 Mad. 166.

—S. 145, 148, 439—Possession proceedings—Award of costs—Discretion of Magistrate—High Court, revisional jurisdiction of.

A Magistrate should, in awarding costs in proceedings under S. 145, hold an enquiry as to the expenditure in costs actually incurred by the party in whose favour the order is made. The High Court, however, has no jurisdiction to interfere with an award of costs in such proceedings either under S. 107 of the Government of India Act, 1915, or under S. 439, Cr. P. C. Nemdhari Singh v. Ram Tahal Rai. 17 Cr. L. J. 348 : 35 I. C. 514 : A. I. R. 1916 Pat. 396.

land and is not concerned with the question of title. All that he can do is to maintain possession after due inquiry in strict compliance with its provisions. Where there is no evidence showing a likelihood of a breach of the peace and no inquiry is made in the case, an order under S. 145 cannot be sustained. Bogha v. Emperor. 14 Cr. L. J. 138 : 18 I. Where, a preliminary order under S. 145 contains a finding that a party was in possession a few days before the date of the order, but contains no finding who was in possession on the actual date of the order, the order is illegal but if there is nothing on the record to suggest that there was any change of possession in the interval, a High Court is not bound in revision, to vacate the order. Mahomed Husain v. Pachayappa Chetty. 23 Cr. L. J. 92 : 65 I. C. 444 : 14 L. W. 678 : 1921 M. W. N. 866 : 42 M. L. J. 147 : A. I. R. 1922 Mad. 356.

In a proceeding under S. 145 a party who entered into possession more than two months next before the date of the preliminary order under the section and retained such possession by virtue of an order under S. 144 directing his opponent to abstain from entering upon the land in question, should be declared to be entitled to possession thereof until evicted in due course of law, as the period during which the injunction was in force against his opponent cannot be excluded. The High Court in revision of a proceeding under S. 145 ought not to enter into the question of the sufficiency of evidence in support of a finding arrived at by the lower Court. *Srinath Roy v. —S. 145 (4)—Proviso—Possession, what is.

Under the proviso to Sub-s. (4) of S. 145, a Magistrate cannot treat a party who has been forcibly dispossessed more than two months before the date of the preliminary order as if he had been in possession on the date of the preliminary order, even if his dispossession had taken place within two months of the date of his complaint. 32 Cr. entirely within the Magistrate's own discretion. But proceedings under S. 145, drawn up by a Magistrate under the directions of a District Magistrate cannot be held to be illegal where the Magistrate had ample materials before him for drawing up such proceedings and does not base his proceedings entirely on the order of the District Magistrate. *Nripendra Chandra Sen v. Sub-s. (4) and (5) of S. 145 are not exhaustive and are not intended to prevent a Magistrate from terminating proceedings under S. 145, when he is satisfied that the very cause and reason of proceedings under S. 145 has ceased to exist. The Magistrate can cancel his order under Sub-s. (1) or terminate the proceedings when, upon other information, or on his own information he is satisfied that no dispute likely to cause a breach of peace exists. *Mohammad Ayoob Saifuddin v. Where in a proceeding under S. 145 one of the parties offers to give up his claim to property in dispute, if the opposite party would take special oath but the opposite party refuses to do so, the refusal although it cannot be treated as anything conclusive, is yet a matter which the Court is entitled to take into consideration along with the other evidence and it is open to the trial Court to draw such inference from this conduct of the party as it thinks fit. *Nandkishore Singh v. In a proceeding under S. 145, eight out of eleven persons forming the second party filed written statements claiming possession of a portion of the lands in dispute, but the Magistrate in his final order declared the possession of the whole of the lands to be with the second party : Held, that the defect in the Magistrate's order was not a question of jurisdiction, but that the case should go back to the Magistrate to see whether in fact any error had been committed and that, if so committed, it was for him to correct it. *Gagan Chand Naskar v. A Magistrate has no jurisdiction to review an order passed under S. 145 discharging a party from the proceedings. So far as the party discharged from the proceedings is concerned, the order is final. It is the initial duty of a Magistrate under S. 145 to find out what parties are concerned in the dispute that has arisen, and he should also determine what parties are in actual possession: Proceedings under S. 145 are not without jurisdiction because some of the parties are concerned only with possession of a portion of the lands in dispute. An order under S. 145 is illegal, if it is based upon evidence some of which was recorded behind the back of a person who was at the time not a party to the proceedings but who is nevertheless sought to be bound by the order. *Narayan v. All that a Magistrate is empowered to do under S. 145 is to declare that a certain party is entitled to possession of the property in dispute. He has no jurisdiction to order restoration of possession. At the same time, if a party is declared to be entitled to possession, and the world at large is forbidden to disturb his possession, he would be entitled to take possession and no one would have any right to interfere with his doing so. *Bahawala v. —S. 145—Power of Magistrate—Proceedings under—Question of title, relevancy of—Unworked minerals—Possessions, nature of—Person having heritable and transferable rights in land under patta—Sub-soil rights not granted by patta—Ownership of minerals—Unworked minerals, how can be possessed—Possession and ouster—Possession by holder of patta—Operations carried on by pattadar did not constitute ouster of proprietor's possession over unworked minerals.

The Court, in proceedings under S. 145, can properly consider questions relating to title where such is necessary in order to ascertain who is in possession. Unworked minerals are not capable of such possession as is the surface of land or a house. Minerals can be possessed by actual working ; but where a large portion of the mineral area has not been worked, it is necessary that the Magistrate should consider who is the owner of the minerals in order to decide the question of possession. In the case of unworked minerals, possession follows title and the owner of unworked minerals is in possession of them though he is not actually engaged in working them. If the owner of unworked minerals under a defined area sinks a shaft and begins to work the minerals in that area, he can properly be said to be in actual physical possession of the whole of the minerals in that area. In the same way, if the owner of minerals under a defined area grants to third parties mining leases of the minerals under portions of such area, he exercises acts of ownership over those minerals and he can truly be said to be in possession of the whole of the minerals under that defined area. A person was in possession of certain land under a patta which did not expressly grant right to the minerals therein. He caused to be made a geological survey of some portion of the land. He had been mining bauxite and had stacked quantities of ore obtained near these sites. He had also built a road up to the nearest railway station for carting the bauxite for transit by rail and built a bhandar for the use of the coolies working on the site. He had, however, not worked over the whole area. The evidence showed that intensive working had only taken place for a very short period of time before proceedings under S. 145 were started and up to the time of these proceedings, work had only taken place on the extreme western edge of the hill situated in those lands : Held, that the person was in possession of the minerals at the places which were actually being worked by him : Held, also that the operations carried on by the person did not, however, constitute an ouster of the possession of the proprietor of the land over the unworked minerals in that area. Where a proprietor holding a permanently settled estate grants a permanent heritable and transferable interest in certain lands by a patta, but the patta does not grant in express terms the right in the minerals, the person holding the land under the patta cannot found a title to the sub-soil right. In such a case, the proprietor shall be deemed to be the owner of the minerals underlying the land. Ranchi Zamindari Co., Ltd. v. Pratub Udainath Sahi Deo. 40 Cr. L. J. 631 : 182 I. C. 89 : 20 P. —S. 145—Power of Magistrate—Title—Possession—Handing over profit to party.

In a case under S. 145, the Magistrate has no jurisdiction to enquire into the rights of parties. What he has got to look to is the fact of possession only. A Magistrate in a case under S. 145 passed the following order :—" I further order that if any fruit has been gathered on any of the said land attached by order of this Court, the proceeds of such fruit, minus expenses, shall be handed over to A : Held, there is no authority in S. 145 or any other section

A Magistrate has no power to appoint a Receiver under S. 145, and an order appointing a Receiver under that section is ultra vires and illegal. It is, however, competent to him in his administrative capacity to appoint some person to manage on his behalf the property so attached and that subject to his control and supervision. The person so appointed is in no sense a Receiver but merely a servant of the Magistrate and has no powers which a Receiver appointed under S. 146 (2) can exercise. If after attachment of the property under S. 145, the proceedings are dropped as the Magistrate comes to the conclusion that there is no likelihood of a breach of the peace, he has no jurisdiction to direct that the attached property should be delivered to one of the parties to the proceedings, as the effect of such an order would be to decide the question at issue between the parties. The proper order is to direct that the property should remain in his custody and management pending the decision of a Civil Court. Dashrath v. Tara Chand.

A Magistrate who has drawn up proceedings under S. 145, is not empowered to delegate any of his judicial functions to any persons other than a Magistrate or to direct any person to report as to who is in possession of the lands in dispute, but he has jurisdiction to direct a Pleader Commissioner to survey the disputed lands and report. If a report is wrongly relied on by a Magistrate taking proceedings under S. 145, that would not amount to an error or want of jurisdiction which would warrant an interference of a High Court. A mere survey of lands in dispute in a proceeding under S. 145, after inquiry from all the parties as to what land is in dispute, does not amount to a "local inquiry" within the meaning of S. 148 of the Act but is a mere ministerial act. A party who throughout asserts that the lands mentioned in the proceedings under S. 145 could be identified, cannot be allowed on the judgment being against him to assert the contrary in High Court. *Chulai Mahto v. A Magistrate, who has initiated proceedings by a preliminary order under S. 145, can pursue one of three courses : he can cancel the preliminary order under Sub-s. (5) if he is satisfied that no dispute of the nature mentioned in the section exists or he can find who is in possession and issue an order under

Sub-s. (6) or he can attach the property under S. 146 of the Code. Where a Magistrate starts proceedings under S. 145, he cannot refuse to proceed with the enquiry on the ground that proceedings had already been taken by another Court in which the question of possession had been incidentally decided. The High Court has jurisdiction to set aside such an order in revision. Palani Goundan v. Kulandavelu Goundan, 24 Cr. L. J. 429 :

In the absence of the preliminary finding as to the existence of a dispute concerning land likely to cause a breach of the peace, a Magistrate is not justified in taking any action under S. 145. In a proceeding under S. 145, the scope of Magistrate's inquiry is limited to a finding as to possession, and on that finding the only order which he legally can pass is one declaring which of the disputing parties is entitled to possession and forbidding all disturbances of his possession until evicted in due course of law. A finding with respect to the merits of the claims of the respective parties to a right of possession of the subject of dispute is a finding wholly without jurisdiction. *Nga Po Tin v. Where in a preliminary order made by a Magistrate in a proceeding under S. 145, there is no finding regarding possession of the property in dispute, but there are very general observations in regard to the ownership of the property, the order constitutes an infringement of the provisions of Ss. 145 and 146, and being without jurisdiction, the High Court is justified in setting aside such order, in the exercise of its revisional jurisdiction, as null and void. The mere fact that the order purports to be passed under S. 145, will not bring it within that section. Sinanani Shukulathi Rowther v. Gulam Moidcen. 24 Cr. L. J. 156 :

In order to give jurisdiction to a Magistrate to take proceedings under S. 145, it is essential that he should be satisfied that a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace exists, and the first step is the recording of the initial order, the contents of which are specified in the first clause of S. 145. But the mere omission to record the preliminary order is not a fatal defect, if no prejudice has been caused thereby. Trees which have been severed from the land do not come within the purview of S. 145, Sub-s. (2). Sajad Hussain v. Nanak Chand. 18 Cr. L. J. 461.

A proceeding under S. 145 can only be drawn up, when the Magistrate is satisfied from a Police report or other information that a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace exists. The Magistrate is bound to set forth the ground on which he is satisfied as to the existence to the danger of a breach of the peace. When an order passed by a Magistrate under S. 145 (1) is cancelled by him on the ground that he is satisfied that no dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace exists, the Magistrate is not competent subsequently to revive the proceeding. He can only take action to start a fresh proceeding upon fresh materials under cl. (1) of the section. So far as the question of possession is concerned, an enquiry under S. 145 should be as full as that in a summons-case, entitling each party to adduce evidence. The final order in a proceeding under S. 145 ought to declare the party in whose favour the Magistrate finds possession to be, and to direct that that party shall continue in possession of the property until evicted therefrom in due course of law, forbidding all disturbance of such possession until such eviction. A mere warning to the opposite party not to interfere with the possession of the party in whose favour the order is made is not sufficient. Khubi Singh v. Darbari Mahton.

Where in proceedings under S. 145 a Magistrate has issued a preliminary order under Sub-s. (1) and has attached the property in dispute, the Magistrate has jurisdiction under Sub-s. (5) to cancel the original order subsequently where the circumstances justify this. The Magistrate, however, has no power after cancelling the preliminary order to order delivery of the property attached to one of the parties to the proceedings. The proper order in such a case is to direct that the property should remain in his custody and management pending decision of a Civil Court on the question of title. *Sahabzada Daljit Singh v. Where while passing a preliminary order under S. 145, the Magistrate has relied on the Police report which is on the record, his reference to that constitutes sufficient ground for the order. It is necessary for making an order under S. 145, that the Magistrate should be satisfied at the time of drawing up the proceedings that there is then existing a likelihood of breach of the peace arising from the disputes between the parties with regard to the land in question. The omission to state in the preliminary order issued under S. 145, Cl. —S. 146 (1)—Preliminary order, condition precedent of—Jurisdiction.

The condition precedent authorizing a Magistrate to issue an order under S. 145 (1) is that he should be satisfied that a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace exists. The fact that the complaint shows that the complainant was out of possession of the property in dispute for over two months does not vitiate the proceedings under S. 145. *Shesharao Nagorao Patil v. and the proviso only applies if any other party had been forcibly dispossessed within two months thereof. The presumption of possession in favour of a particular party raised under the proviso of S. 145 (1) does not arise if the party has been out of possession for more than two months previous to the date of the preliminary order. The fact that proceedings were first started under S. 107 and the Magistrate came to the conclusion that proceedings under S. 145 would be more suitable after a long time, would not extend the time under the proviso. Though it is competent to a Magistrate to rely on mere Police report in order to pass a preliminary order under S. 145, if he came to the conclusion that there is an imminent danger of a breach of the peace, it is advisable that the Magistrate should have and carefully scrutinize other evidence before passing an order under the section as the misuse of provisions of Ss. 107 and 145 requires to be discouraged. *Nago v. (4) of S. 145. When a Magistrate attaches in cases of emergency the property which is the subject of dispute, under the second proviso to Cl. (4) of S. 145, and after receiving all the evidence adduced by the parties is unable to satisfy himself as to which of the parties was in possession at the date of the preliminary order, it is quite open to him to continue the attachment already made till a competent Court has determined the rights of “the

S. 203, Cr. P. C., has nothing to do with proceedings under S. 145 and where an application is made under S. 145, the Magistrate ought to proceed with the case according to the provisions of S. 145. The only case in which a Magistrate can refuse to take action under S. 145 is when he is not satisfied that there is a danger of a breach of the peace. In case he is satisfied by the Police report that there was a danger of a breach of the peace, his duty is to proceed under S. 145 and to issue notices to the parties. If notices are issued to the parties and written statements filed by them, it is again his duty under Sub-s. 4 of S. 145 to receive all such evidence as might have been produced by the parties. The procedure of the Magistrate in considering the evidence given in another case as evidence in S. 145 case even though the other case was pending in his own Court as a Revenue Court is entirely unauthorised and illegal. *Emperor v. Under S. 145 a Magistrate has in cases of emergency the power to attach the subject in dispute, but he has no power at that stage to appoint a Receiver. Where a Magistrate takes proceedings under S. 145, the object of the law is that he shall confirm the party in actual possession. He is not competent to dispossess such a party by appointing a Receiver and the order of attachment which the law empowers him to make has no greater force than any Civil Court attachment, the effect of which is generally to restrain alienation. A Receiver can be appointed only where the Magistrate is unable to decide which of the parties is in possession and has a right to remain in possession, and considers it necessary that the property should vest in some person appointed by the Court under S. 146, Cr. Magistrate cannot appoint a Receiver under

S. 145 (4). The Magistrate can only attach the property but it is not stated in the Code as to how the attachment is to be effected. If the land in dispute is land paying revenue to Government, and if analogy of S. 88 were to be followed, the Magistrate must attach it through the Collector. The word "attach" merely means to bring under the control of the Court, and Magistrate is entitled to effect that object in any way which is within his power. Certainly, the appointment of a Receiver with the power of a Receiver under the Code of Civil Procedure is not one of those ways, because unless that power is expressly given, a Magistrate cannot exercise it. It is not advisable to employ the term "Receiver" owing to the possibilities of misunderstanding that may arise, yet it is clear that if the Magistrate's attachment is to be effected, he must put some person into possession of the property, who will have authority to maintain his possession. The person put in possession of the property can be awarded the legitimate costs incurred by him for managing the property. Maung San U v. Maung Lu Gale.

An omission to have a copy of such order locally published does not deprive the Court of its jurisdiction when the provisions of S. 145 (1) are complied with. An order passed under S. 145 by a Magistrate under circumstances in which the passing of such order was proper, cannot be set aside in revision upon the ground that the initiatory order did not set forth, as explicitly as it might have set forth, the reasons which satisfied the Magistrate that there was a likelihood of a breach of the peace. In proceedings under Chap. XII of the Cr. P. When a Magistrate, having jurisdiction under S. 145, comes to a decision as to possession within the meaning of S. 145 (4), that decision as to possession, whether right or wrong, is one which cannot be questioned in revision. *Iklas Kunwar v. Subject to this, however, the parties have the undoubted right to examine their witnesses and this right cannot be arbitrarily curtailed by the Magistrate. A Chartered High Court has power under S. 107 of the Government of India Act to interfere with an order passed by a Magistrate under S. 145 where the Magistrate has acted without jurisdiction or has exceeded his jurisdiction. It will not interfere merely because there has been an irregularity in the proceedings or an erroneous decision on a question of fact or law, but it can and will interfere where there has been a material irregularity, which amounts to a refusal to exercise or an usurpation of jurisdiction or which has prejudiced a party to the proceedings. In order to establish prejudice it is not sufficient to show that there has been an erroneous decision on a question of law or fact, but it must be shown that the irregularity has prevented a party from having a fair trial. No hard and fast rule can be laid down that a Magistrate in proceedings under S. 145 must give effect to a recent decision or proceeding of a Civil or Criminal Court. *Parmessar Singh v. A petition does not lie under S. 439 Cr. P. C. to revise proceedings under S. 145, Under S. 15 of the Charter Act, it has never been customary to interfere except when it can be said that the Magistrate's order was passed without jurisdiction. The failure by a Magistrate to comply with any provision of the Code as to his preliminary procedure does not destroy his jurisdiction to take action under the Court. Semle:—Such irregularity would be covered by S. 537, Cr. P. C. The essential requisite to give a Magistrate jurisdiction under S. 145, is that he must be satisfied from information of some sort that a dispute exists likely to cause a breach of the peace concerning land or water or the boundaries thereof in his jurisdiction. Once he is so satisfied, his jurisdiction is complete and his subsequent action must be considered in relation to procedure, not jurisdiction. Kamal Kutty v. Udayavarma Raja.

Per Rankin, C. J.—S. 145 is not the only weapon with which a Magistrate is entrusted for the maintenance of the peace in connection with dispute over land. He has a power specially adapted to cases of urgency under S. 144 and he has a power under S. 107 which, in some cases, will suffice. It is clear enough that whatever force be given to the word "shall" in the first Sub-sec. of S. 145, it need in no way embarrass any Magistrate in exercising his discretion. If he is of opinion that an order under S. 107 will meet the case and proposes to make one, he has only to make it to justify himself in holding that the dispute no longer is likely to cause a breach of the peace; he can do this either without taking action under S. 145 or at any stage of proceedings under that section. If he thinks that the case calls for action under S. 144, he can take such action and if he thinks this sufficient to prevent the likelihood of a breach of the peace, he can postpone all action under S. 145. *Agni Kumar Das v. S. 145 only deals with rights of absolute continuous possession of immovable property, and proceedings under that section are entirely without jurisdiction unless they are directed to the decision of absolute continuing possession of either party. The right of a party, who does not claim anything beyond the right to worship on one day in the year and the right to make due and proper preparations for the holding of that worship by erecting huts for the purpose of holding the pūja, is in the nature of an easement and not in the nature of possession, and, therefore, such a party cannot be made a party to a proceeding under S. 145. The public cannot be declared to be in possession of any piece of land, for if that be done, then both parties to the dispute are included in that term and the possession, therefore, is joint possession and the jurisdiction of the Court under S. 145 is ousted. *Manik Chandra Charkravarti v. S. 145 is concerned solely with the fact of actual physical possession whether lawful or unlawful, whether in contemplation of law enjoyed by the possessor in his own right or on behalf of others. Therefore, in proceedings under that section any question as to whether possession is on behalf of others or in one's own right is quite irrelevant. Questions as to the rights of parties raised by their written statements under S. 145, are quite irrelevant; as such proceedings are initiated by the Magistrate in the interests of public order and tranquillity and it is his preliminary order that settles the actual issue between the parties and founds his jurisdiction. *Narayana Asari v. Where, however, the disputants on one or both sides are different for different items of property, the disputants concerned in each item should be given an opportunity of being heard before a decision is arrived at on the question of actual possession, because in such a case, the Magistrate would have no jurisdiction to decide the question of actual possession of a number of items after only hearing the parties who claimed possession of one or two of them. *Velu Malunarayan v. —S. 145—Scope of—Order of ejectment, whether competent—Magistrate, whether can decide claims to hold possession and reap crops—Irregularity—Jurisdiction—Revision—High Court, power of interference of.

The scope of S. 145 is merely a determination of actual possession for the purpose of preventing a breach of the peace pending a decision on the merits in a civil dispute. The section does not provide for eviction by the Magistrate or for a decision by him of any claims to a right to hold possession or to reap crops. Cl. (1) of S. 145 is imperative with regard to the necessity of serving an order in writing on the parties. The mere omission to regard such an order gives the Chief Court power to interfere in revision. Where the proceedings under S. 145 are irregular and the Magistrate has acted without jurisdiction, the Chief Court can interfere in revision. It is not sufficient for a Magistrate to come to a general finding that certain fields are in the possession of one party and certain others in the possession of the other and that the latter has taken wrongful and forcible possession. The date of such forcible possession must be determined and unless there is a finding that the forcible possession occurred in the case of all fields at the same time, there must be a finding as to the date of possession with regard to each field separately. Kaku v. Harnaman.

—S. 145, scope of—Revision—Jurisdiction—Magistrate acting under S. 145—Preliminary order—Grounds not recorded, effect of.

The essential requisite to give a Magistrate jurisdiction under S. 145 is that he must be satisfied from information of some sort that a dispute exists likely to cause a breach of the peace concerning land or water, or the boundaries thereof, within his jurisdiction. There is nothing in S. 435 (3) to prevent a non-chartered High Court interfering in proceedings which purport to be proceedings under Chap. XII, in a case where the Magistrate has initiated those proceedings without jurisdiction to do so. The mere mention of an order as being made under S. 145 will not of itself make that order an order under Chap. XII, Cr. P. C. But it is to be presumed that the work of a Court is done decently and in order, and if a Magistrate has jurisdiction, he can enter the ring-fence of Chap. XII, Cr. P. C., and he cannot be followed nor his procedure examined. An omission to record grounds in the preliminary order made by a Magistrate under S. 145 does not affect his jurisdiction. Udai Bhan Pratab Singh v. Ram Samajh. 18 Cr. L. J. 100 :

—S. 145—Scope of.

S. 145 contemplates the existence of a dispute regarding property likely to lead to a breach of the peace and proceedings thereunder are only initiated for this purpose. —S. 145—Scope of enquiry—Decree of Civil Court involving adjudication of title, how far binding on Criminal Court.

What a Magistrate has to determine in proceedings under S. 145 is which of the two contending parties was in peaceable possession of the property in dispute at the date of the preliminary order. It is quite immaterial, whether such possession is lawful or unlawful. In order that a decree of a Civil Court may be binding on a Magistrate as conclusive evidence of possession, it has to be established that the decree is one for possession of the property in suit, and that the decree-holder obtained possession through Court in execution of such a decree, the Magistrate being bound to maintain the order for delivery of possession contained in such a decree. But an incidental adjudication on the question of ownership in a suit for damages will not bar a Magistrate from deciding a question of possession under S. 145. It is, no doubt, open to a Magistrate to take and consider the evidence of title to enable him to adjudicate upon the question of actual possession, but neither proof of title nor an adjudication on the question of title in favour of a party constitutes proof of actual possession. Shriram v. Emperor.

In proceedings under S. 145, a Magistrate should not go into the question of title; his function is merely to go into the question of possession. ———Ss. 145, 146—Scope, standard of proof, in proceedings under S. 145—Decision on balance of evidence—Attachment when should be passed—Evidence of first party although weak, yet preferable to evidence of second party—Order.

In a proceeding under S. 145, it would not be proper to set up any absolute standard of proof and to say that evidence not up to this standard will not be acted on by the Court for the purpose of an order under that section. The proceeding under S. 145 can be decided on the balance of evidence and if the Magistrate can see his way to express an opinion that the evidence of one side is superior to the evidence on the other side, then he is entitled to and should, if possible, form a definite opinion on the question of fact who is in possession. An order under S. 146, attaching the property, is a desperate remedy for cases in which the Magistrate finds it quite impossible to choose between the conflicting evidence adduced by the two sides. It would be regrettable if it were necessary to pass such an order when the first Court has been able to make up its mind in favour of one party. If the Magistrate thinks that the evidence for the first party, weak, though it might be, is preferable to the evidence for the second party, it is the Magistrate's duty to give a decision in favour of the first party. *Nandkishore Singh v. —S. 145—Symbolical possession in execution of a foreclosure decree, not effective against a lessee who was not a party to the mortgage suit—Actual possession to be considered, nature of.

It is settled rule of law that no decree for foreclosure could be effective against a person interested in the property, if he was not made a party to the suit.

Where, therefore, S had executed in 1890 a mortgage by conditional sale in favour of G, and had in 1893 leased the properties covered by it to B for 25 years, and G in 1902, instituted a suit against S upon the mortgage without making B a party and obtained symbolical possession in execution of the decree for foreclosure passed therein : Held, that such delivery of possession could not affect the possession of B. Bloomfield v. Gangadhar Kundu.

Where symbolical possession of a holding was delivered to a party on the 2nd June, 1915, and proceedings under S. 145 in respect of the same holding were instituted in November, 1916 : Held, that it was incumbent on the Magistrate to go into the question of actual possession between those two dates and consider the evidence tendered by the parties on that question before he could properly pass a final order under S. 145, Cr. P. C., and that it was not competent to him to wholly discard and leave out of consideration the evidence of actual possession on the date on which the proceedings were instituted. *Hazani Khan v. Cr. P. CODE (1898), S. 145

Where in execution of a decree the Court orders delivery of possession of judgment-debtor's property to the decree-holder and the Officer of Court executing the delivery warrant gives effect to the order and since then the decree-holder is in possession both in fact and in law of the property in question but the judgment-debtor within two months of the execution of such warrant attempts forcible entry upon the land whereupon the decree-holder files a petition under S. 145, the Magistrate cannot go behind the decision of the Civil Court in the matter and cannot ignore the decree even though the Court passing the decree had no jurisdiction over the land. It is immaterial that the delivery of possession is symbolical only. In the enquiry under S. 145, there is only one conclusion possible for the Magistrate to arrive at with reference to the land, that is, that it was in the possession of the applicant on the date of the order passed under Sub-s. (1) of S. 145. Even assuming that the applicant (decree-holder) had been forcibly dispossessed at any time after the execution of the delivery order, the first Proviso to Sub-s. (4) will operate in favour of the applicant. Consequently, when in such circumstances the Magistrate passes an order under S. 146 (1) referring the parties back to Civil Court for the determination of their rights, the order is highly improper and opposed to all principles of justice. *Maung Kan v. Consequently, where a District Magistrate, on receipt of a Police report to the effect that there is likelihood of a breach of the peace in certain locality, makes an order to draw up proceedings under S. 147 and serves notices on the parties, ordering them to appear before another Magistrate, the order is not without jurisdiction. *Abdul Hamid v. S. 526 is applicable to proceedings under S. 145 and the High Court has, therefore, power to direct a transfer of such proceedings. In a proceeding under S. 145 the question whether there is likely to be a breach of the peace is an executive question, on which the Magistrate may form his opinion on any information, not necessarily on evidence at all; and the mere fact that the Magistrate has made up his mind that there is no likelihood of a breach of the peace, is not a ground for directing a transfer of the proceeding to another Magistrate. *Mohammad Naji Khan v. An order under S. 146 can be made only where the Magistrate is unable to satisfy himself as to which of the contending parties is in possession. Where a Magistrate after having legally instituted proceedings under S. 145 made no effort whatsoever to ascertain the fact of possession, but after discarding and rejecting on erroneous grounds practically every piece of evidence that might have led him to a correct conclusion as to possession, made his final order under S. 146: Held, (1) that the final order made by the Magistrate was either without jurisdiction or involved such gross and material irregularities as to seriously prejudice one of the parties to the proceeding; (2) that the final order must be set aside and the proceedings resumed from the point reached when the two parties closed their evidence as either of them may be advised. Where a previous dispute between the parties to a proceeding under S. 145 was terminated by an order under the provisions of Ss. 40 and 41 of the Bengal Survey Act V of 1875, and an entry in the Record of Rights was made in accordance with that order, the Magistrate in determining the question of possession should, in the first instance, presume that the possession of the land in dispute is with the party in whose favour the order under the Bengal Survey Act and the entry in the Record of Rights were made. *Prafulla Nath Tagore v. The inquiry contemplated by the Proviso to Sub-s. (2) of S. 147, is the enquiry referred to in Sub-s. (1) of the said section. An occurrence took place on the 15th November, 1928, relating to a dispute over an alleged right of way. The complaint lodged was sent for local inquiry and the Sub-Divisional Officer considered the report and heard the parties and their Pleaders on the 12th January, 1929, and asked for further report as to the likelihood of a breach of the peace. On the 16th February, the report of the Police was considered, the complaint was dismissed and proceedings under S. 147 were instituted. The Honorary Magistrate held that he had no jurisdiction to make an order under S. 147 (2) as the alleged obstruction was beyond three months of the date of the institution of the inquiry, but passed an order under S. 147 (3). The District Magistrate held that the inquiry was commenced on the 12th of January, within three months of the alleged obstruction and made a reference to the High Court : Held, (1) that the District Magistrate was wrong in coming to the conclusion that the 12th January was the date of the institution of the inquiry ; (2) that the order of the Honorary Magistrate under S. 147 (3) was, however, illegal as an order under the said clause could be made only if the right of way did not exist. *Sohan Lohar v. Where a breach of the peace is threatened over a dispute in respect of the right of certain persons to use a land as a burial ground, the section applicable is S. 147, and not S. 145. The important point for consideration in such a case is not the question of possession of the land, but whether the persons claiming the right exercised that right when occasions arose. The circumstance that certain vacant portions of the land were improperly used for raising crops does not necessarily affect the right to use the land as burial ground. *Mahammad Abdul Khuddus Sahib v. ———S. 147, Proviso—Jurisdiction, basis of—Exercise of right within three months.

An order under S. 147 is without jurisdiction if it is made in the absence of any finding that the right in dispute was exercised within 3 months anterior to the enquiry. In order to vest a Court with jurisdiction to deal with a matter under S. 147, it must appear that where the right to do such thing is exercisable at all times of the year, the right has been exercised within three months next before the institution of the enquiry, or where the right is exercisable only in particular seasons or on particular occasions, the right has been exercised during the last of such seasons. *Babu Khan v. Under Sub-s. (2) of S. 147, a Magistrate has power only to issue a prohibitory order restraining any person from doing any act interfering with the right of another person when the Magistrate finds that such right exists. The power given to a Magistrate under this sub-section is analogous to the power of a Civil Court to grant a temporary injunction restraining a person from doing a certain act, but the sub-section does not authorize a Magistrate to make an order in the nature of a mandatory injunction directing a party to perform a certain act; for instance, an act directing a party to demolish a wall that has been built by him. *Hari Mali Dasi v. confirmed by his local inspection. It is open to a Magistrate to pass an order under S. 147 giving to a party to the proceedings a right of way which is limited by the exclusion of vehicular traffic. It may be that it is unnecessary definitely to find under S. 147 which party is in possession, but such a finding, that a particular party is in possession, does not affect materially proceedings which are ostensibly taken under S. 147. *Muhammad Musa v. ———S. 147—Scope—Local inspection, scope and use of—Note of inspection.

The rule that in criminal cases a Court is only justified in holding a local inspection in order to explain the facts appearing in the evidence does not apply to S. 147. Special provision is made in the Code for local inspection in these cases. In cases where rights of irrigation and rights of taking water through particular channels from particular reservoirs are concerned, a local inspection is eminently necessary. Although, as a rule, it is better to have such an inspection made by some other person, there is nothing in law to prevent the presiding Magistrate from making it himself provided he records what he sees and does not act upon hearsay evidence. A Court's finding must be based upon evidence duly recorded by it and not upon the impression formed by the Judge on a local inspection of the locality. He can, in order to elucidate the evidence, make a local inspection and the object of a local enquiry would be only with a view to understand the evidence actually adduced in the case. But it is absolutely necessary that if a Magistrate makes a local enquiry he must make a note of what he sees and must place it on the record, so that the parties may be in a position to know his impression and correct it if it is wrong. Abdul Hamid v. Hasan Raza.

The provisions of S. 147 are of an emergency nature and an inquiry under the section is conducted more or less summarily. If the Magistrate, as the result of hearing the evidence, thinks that reasonable grounds have been shown to him that a bona fide claim of right exists, he is justified in passing such order under the section as he may think fit. It is not expected that he should usurp the functions of the Civil Court or that the inquiry under S. 147 should be a formal trial of the matter in issue. six years within which to apply for the recovery thereof, the mere fact that there is delay, not exceeding such period, in applying to recover the costs, would not justify a Magistrate in refusing the application. —S. 154—First Information Report, recording of, during investigation.

In a suitable case, information under S. 154, may be recorded even in the course of an investigation by a Police Officer, but in such cases, it is from that information that investigation begins into the cognizable offence which was divulged by the information. If prior to that a statement was made to the Police and recorded in the station diary, it is not affected by S. 162 and can be admitted in evidence. Mani Mohan Ghose v. Emperor.

The information referred to in S. 151 is something in the nature of a complaint or accusation, or at least information of a crime, given with the object of putting the Police in motion in order to investigate, as distinguished from information obtained by the Police when actively investigating a crime. Circumstances may arise where information given to the Police is vague and indefinite, that it cannot be treated as coming under S. 154 so as to make the officer in charge of the Police Station to start an investigation and he may reasonably require more direct information and such further information given to him in such circumstances might not come under S. 162. Or the information referred to in S. 154 may come from more sources than one, and be recorded at or about the same time. But once definite information has reached of a cognizable offence under S. 154 and the Police have taken active steps to investigate, whether the information has been taken down in the book kept for that purpose as provided in S. 154 or not, all further statements taken from the witnesses are taken in the course of a Police investigation and are inadmissible in evidence under S. 162. *Gansa Oraon v. The complainant before a Magistrate stated certain circumstances. The latter referred the matter to the Police with authority to investigate and report. The police submitted a report as to the result of their investigation. The Magistrate then made a further inquiry and examined S. (the suspected person) on solemn affirmation. During examination, S. made certain statements which appeared to be false. The Magistrate, acting under S. 476, Cr. P. C. sent S. to another Magistrate for enquiry whether S. had committed the offence of perjury. The Sessions Judge referred the case to the High Court being of opinion that the order was unsustainable, first because, the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to refer the matter to the Police, there being no complaint before the Magistrate as required by S. 202, Cr. P. C. and no examination of the complainant by him; and, secondly, because S. was illegally sworn, he being an accused person: Held, that the Magistrate was empowered to refer the matter to the Police for investigation, under S. 155, Cl. 2,

Where a District Magistrate takes cognizance of a complaint under S. 200, Cr. P. He cannot direct the Police, if they find the case to be established, to submit a charge-sheet to the Magistrate concerned. S. 156 (3) does not apply to such a case as the section only empowers the Magistrate to order a Police inquiry in a case when the Magistrate does not himself issue process at once. Where the Sub-Divisional Magistrate accepts the charge-sheet submitted by the Police under such circumstances, and proceeds with the case without any order by the District Magistrate under S. 204 or any order of transfer of the case to him under S. 192, his proceedings are void. *Isaf Nasya v. Ss. 157, 159, 202, 476—Enquiry by a Magistrate—Enquiry without jurisdiction—Magistrate's action under S. 476 not sustainable.

A report was made that a certain person had committed an offence. The Sub-Inspector reported that the case was a false one. The District Magistrate then verbally directed the Superintendent of Police to enquire and report. The Superintendent reported that the case was not true but suggested that a Magisterial enquiry should be made. The District Magistrate ordered a Deputy Magistrate to hold a Magisterial enquiry. The Deputy Magistrate found the case to be false and took steps under S. 476, Cr. P. C., against persons who had given false evidence before him to support the case: Held, that the order of the Deputy Magistrate was without jurisdiction, as the enquiry held by him was not under any section of the Cr. P. C. or any other legal sanction. Abdul Rahman v. Emperor.

the purpose of contradicting such witness when produced at the trial but after strict compliance with the provisions of S. 145, Evidence Act. The proper procedure would, therefore, be to ask a witness first whether he made such and such statement before the Police Officer. If the witness returns the answer in the affirmative, the previous statement in writing need not be proved and the cross-examiner may, if he so chooses, leave it to the party who called the witness to have the discrepancy, if any, explained in the course of re-examination. If, on the other hand, the witness denies having made the previous statement attributed to him or states that he does not remember having made any such statement and it is desired to contradict him by the record of the previous statement, the cross-examiner must read out to the witness the relevant portion or portions of the record which are alleged to be contradictory to his statement in Court and give him an opportunity to reconcile the same, if he can. It is only when the cross-examiner has done so, that the record of the previous statement becomes admissible in evidence for the purpose of contradicting the witness and can then be proved in any manner permitted by law. S. 155, Evidence Act, only lays down that the credit of a witness may be impeached, inter alia, by "proof of former statements inconsistent with any part of his evidence which is liable to be contradicted" but it does not lay down the manner in which the former statement is to be proved. The mode of proof of such a statement in writing when it is sought to be tendered in evidence for contradicting a witness is provided in S. 145 of the Act. Gopi Chand v. Emperor.

In the course of a Sessions trial, the Investigating Sub-Inspector of Police, when examined as a prosecution witness, was asked whether he had, during the investigation, examined any witness on behalf of the accused. He stated that he had examined certain witnesses but that they had denied their presence at the occurrence. One of the persons named by the Sub-Inspector had been summoned by the accused as a defence witness: Held, that the statement of the Sub-Inspector was not admissible in evidence having regard to the provisions of S. 162. A person who makes a map in a criminal case ought not to put upon it anything more than what he sees himself. Particulars derived from witnesses examined on the spot should not be noted on the body of the map but on a separate sheet of paper annexed to the map as an index thereto. Such particulars are hearsay evidence and are not admissible. Bhagirathi v. Emperor.

—S. 162—Construction—“In the course of”, meaning of.

The words “in the course of” in the context of S. 162 import that the statement must be made as a step in a pending investigation to be used in that investigation. The words “in the course of” do not refer merely to that period of time which elapses between the beginning and the end of the investigation. Consequently a report made independently of any pending investigation and not designed to promote a pending investigation but to start one having no reference at all to the investigation which has, in fact, begun, cannot be said to have been made “in the course of” the investigation of the case. *Emperor v. Cr. P. CODE (1898), S. 162—S. 162—Contradiction.

Even if the statement is recorded in the form of a memorandum of what the witnesses had said to the Police Officer, it is available for the purpose of contradicting the witness. It is not necessary in order that an accused person may be allowed under S. 162 to contradict the witness that the statement must contain the very words used by the witness. Mafizaddi v. Emperor. 28 Cr. L. J. 805 :

—S. 162—Contradiction—Procedure.

If the defence desires to contradict a witness by his statement recorded in the Police diary, the proper procedure is to proceed in the manner laid down in S. 162. But the defence cannot ask the witness at the end of the cross-examination whether he made the statement to the Police. Ram Bharosey v. Emperor.

—S. 162—Contradiction—Procedure.

The only way a witness can be contradicted by statements made to the Police under the provisions of S. 162 is to prove his written statement and put it to the witness under S. 145, Evidence Act, to permit him to explain the contradictions, if any. Statements made to Police cannot be used at a trial in any other way. Emperor v. Ibrahim.

Under S. 162 the statement of a witness in evidence can only be contradicted by his alleged statement to Police on two conditions : (i) that the application for contradiction is made by the accused, and (ii) that the statement of Police should be proved by a certified copy of the diary. *Wesley v. —S. 162—Contradiction—Scope of.

S. 162, Cr. P. C., cannot bear the construction that while any part of the statement of a witness to the Police may be used to contradict him, yet if the contradiction consists in this that a statement made at the trial was not made in any part of the statement

A statement made by witness to Police during investigation is relevant only for contradicting the testimony of the witness given at trial, and any statement previously made by a witness before a Magistrate, including a statement made before the Committing Magistrate which has not been transferred to the Sessions record under S. 288, Cr. In other words there is a "specific provision to the contrary" within the meaning of S. 1 (2), Cr. P. C., and affects S. 27, Evi. Act. Where an accused makes a statement to Police to the effect that the knife with which he and the other co-accused had killed the deceased was at his house under heap of pyal, the statement is inadmissible in evidence under S. 27, Evi. S. 162, Cr. P. C., is wide to include statements made to Police which would be admissible under S. 27, Evidence Act, as constituting information in consequence of which some fact has been discovered. But S. 162 does not shut out statements which are admissible under S. 27, Evidence Act, since S. 27 is a special law which cannot be derogated from by the general rule enacted in S. 162, Cr. P. The object of S. 162 is to prevent statements of witnesses made before Police from being used by prosecution under S. 145, 155 and 157, Evidence Act, which sections are not confined to criminal cases, and, not to repeal S. 27, Evidence Act. Azimaddy v. Emperor.

Cr. P. CODE (1898), S. 162

—S. 162—Effect on Evidence Act—Evidence Act (I of 1872), Ss. 27, 157—Statement made by accused person to Police during investigation, whether can be proved at trial—Interpretation of Statutes.

Held, by the Full Bench.—The provisions of S. 162 prohibit the use of statements made to Police during the course of an investigation, whether the statements are oral or are reduced into writing except the latter statements which may be used in the restricted manner laid down by the Section : Held, by majority (Hcald, J. dissenting).—S. 27, Evidence Act, is neither repealed nor affected by S. 162, Cr. P. C., and consequently "information received from a person accused of any offence in the custody of a Police Officer" is not a statement under S. 162 (1) of the Cr. P. C., and its proof at trial is not prohibited by provisions of the latter section. The words "nor shall any such statement" in S. 162 (1) of the Cr. P. C. mean and refer to a statement made by any person to a Police, and during investigation under Ch. XIV. The words "if reduced into writing" only apply to the words "be signed by the person making it" and the use of an oral statement is, therefore, equally prohibited along with that of a written statement. Per Rulledge, C. J.—The ban of S. 162 of the Cr. P. C. applies only to statements made to Police making an investigation under Ch. XIV of the Code. If the investigation under that Chapter is finished, then the section cannot be invoked to prohibit statements made to Police at some time subsequent to investigation, if, on the other hand, statements made to Police when preparing a map or holding an identification parade, are statements made during investigation under Ch. XIV, then they are prohibited under S. 162. Per Duckworth, J.—S. 157, Evidence Act, is affected by S. 162, Cr. P. C., so far as statements to Police taken under S. 161 of the Code whether oral or recorded are concerned, but S. 27, Evidence Act, deal with information received from persons accused of an offence and in Police custody is not affected by the aforesaid section of the Code. Per Hcald, J.—S. 27, Evidence Act to the extent to which it allows proof of a statement made by an accused person to the Police while in the custody of the Police, during the investigation of a case, must be regarded as having been repealed by the amended S. 162, Cr. P. C. Statutes are not to be held to be repealed by implication unless the repugnancy between the new provision and the former Statute is plain and unavoidable. Emperor v. Nga Tha Din.

S. 157 of the Evidence Act lays down that in order to corroborate testimony of a witness any former statement made by such witness relating to the same facts is admissible in evidence, but this general rule is controlled by the special provisions in S. 162 relating to criminal trials. Under that section not only is record of statement of a witness to the Police taken under S. 161 excluded from evidence, but also proof of such statement by oral evidence for corroborating the testimony of a witness for the prosecution. *Rakha v. Per Knox, J.—The general provisions of the Evidence Act contained in S. 157, are controlled by the special provisions of S. 162, Cr. P. C. The deposition of a police having reference to his diary, as to the statement of a certain witness made during investigation cannot be admitted in evidence under S. 157 to corroborate the testimony of that witness. Per Karamat Hussain, J.—S. 162 prohibits only the use as evidence of recorded statements of the witness made to the investigating police officer; that section so far as the oral statements are concerned, is not in conflict with S. 157, Evidence Act, and oral statements made to the police may be proved by calling him as a witness in order to corroborate the testimony of the witnesses. S. 91 of the Evidence Act has no application to an oral statement made to an investigating Police officer for it is not a matter which is required by law to be reduced to the form of a document. Rustom v. Emperor.

S. 162 entitles an accused person to request a trial Court to refer to a statement previously made by a prosecution witness to Police during investigation. The Court when so requested, is bound to refer to such statement and bound to provide a copy of it unless of opinion that it is irrelevant. The onus of moving the Court rests upon accused, but the accused may not know what a witness has stated to the Police and, therefore, may not use his privilege when it might assist him. A Judge is at liberty to adopt a course at his own instance, which he is bound to do if requested by the accused and a trial Court should refer to previous statements of witnesses, even if not requested by the accused, and if such reference reveals any point materially in favour of the accused, it should not be disregarded but the Court should give a copy to accused of its own motion to prevent a failure of justice. Sultan Mir v. Emperor.

It is only after a statement has been referred to, that the Court may exercise its discretion in the matter of giving a copy to the accused. It is while the evidence of a witness is in progress, that a copy of his statement to the Police is likely to be of use to the accused in indicating points on which the witness should be questioned, and the whole object of the proviso to S. 162 (1) would be defeated, if the Court were to postpone referring to statement made by the witness before the Police till after the witness's evidence had been concluded. *Sultan v. A Court has no power to reject an application for copies made by an accused under S. 162, merely because in its opinion the previous statements made to the Police of which copies are applied for are not in any way contradictory to the statements made by the witness in Court. There is nothing in S. 162 to authorize the Court to look into the statement in the Police diaries before granting the application. Statements made before the Police can be used only by the accused and that also only for the purpose of contradicting the prosecution witnesses. Jhari Gope v. Emperor.

———S. 162—Granting of copies, stage for—Late application—Procedure.

In this case, the Court was not moved under S. 162 when the first prosecution witness, whom it was subsequently desired by the defence to test by reference to his statement recorded in the diaries, appeared, in the box. But after the prosecution witnesses had all been examined, the defence moved the Court to examine the Sub-Inspector as a Court witness, and on this being refused, they applied to the Court to summon the Sub-Inspector to appear with his diary as a witness for the defence: Held, that this application was obviously under S. 172 and rightly rejected. The diary could not be used for the purpose of proving statements made by witnesses to the Sub-Inspector under S. 161. If the Court even at the late stage of the case, on perusing the diaries, found that it was expedient in the interests of justice to make use of such statement to impeach the credit of the witnesses, it could no doubt have directed the recall of such witnesses, furnished the accused with copies of the statement and permitted further cross-examination but this would be a most unusual practice and highly inconvenient and nothing could justify it but the clearest conviction in the mind of the Court that a miscarriage of justice would otherwise result. *Dadan Gazi v. Per Macpherson, J.—There is no real obscurity in the proviso to S. 162 (1) so far as the grant of copy is concerned. Two points must always be remembered. Firstly the furnishing to accused a copy of the statement of a witness recorded by Police during investigation does not at all arise until the witness is called for the prosecution at inquiry or trial; and secondly, the Court cannot direct that the accused be furnished with a copy unless it contains something constituting a contradiction to a statement made by the witness in his deposition at such inquiry or trial. *Saadat Mian v. The fact that the statements were only reduced to writing in the shape of rough memoranda or notes does not relieve the prosecution of this liability. If the notes are in existence, satisfactory reasons must be given for their non-discovery. Although there is nothing in S. 367 as to when the heads of the charge to the jury should be written, and although it is not necessary that the direction to the jury should be reduced to writing before delivery, yet it ought to be written out as soon as possible after the charge to the jury has been actually delivered and when the facts of the case are fresh in the mind of the Judge. It was contended on behalf of the defence in a criminal trial that the name of one of the accused was not mentioned in the F. I. In dealing with these contentions, the Sessions Judge stated in his judgment that the omission to mention the name of one of the accused in the F. I. R. had been set right in the first zimni report written up by the Sub-Inspector who proceeded at once to the spot and that the zimmis showed that an attempt had been made to secure the attendance of the witness but that he could not be found at his residence : Held, (1) that if the prosecution desired to explain away the omission of the name of one of the accused from the F. I. R., questions should have been put to the Sub-Inspector as to when the name of the accused was first mentioned, and that the omission could not be made up by a reference to the zimmis; (2) that with regard to the omission to produce a particular witness, the Sessions Judge was not entitled to discover the explanation from the zimmis. *Kundan Singh v. An accused was being tried of an offence under S. 182, Penal Code. Before the examination of the prosecution witnesses actually began, the accused put in a petition to the Magistrate complaining that although he made an application asking for a copy of the final report in the case, which was the basis of the complaint against him, he had not been supplied any copies so far. He also stated in that petition that he was not in possession of the statements of the witnesses in the Police diary and, therefore, he prayed that the Court may be pleased "to order the copies to be given to him before he was asked to cross-examine the witnesses." The Magistrate, thereupon, merely directed the Police Sub-Inspector to show the final report to the accused before the case was taken up. Thereafter the witnesses for the prosecution were examined and cross-examined by the accused without his being in possession either of a copy of the final report or of the statements of the prosecution witnesses. The accused was subsequently convicted: Held, that the whole trial was vitiated by reason of failure of the Magistrate to comply with the provisions of S. 162. Dinanath Sahay v. Emperor.

The question whether a statement was recorded during investigation or not is a question of fact. On receiving information of a shooting incident from a constable, a Sub-Inspector of Police entered the information in his diary and started enquiry. He had no information of commission of cognizable offence then. On the spot of the occurrence, the Sub-Inspector took the statement of a witness. While this statement was put in evidence, objection was raised that the statement was inadmissible in evidence under S. 162 : Held, that the statement was admissible in evidence as it could not be said that it was recorded during investigation of offence as the Sub-Inspector had no information of the commission of a cognizable offence when he went to the spot. In re : Mylasawami Chetty.

Under S. 162 statements made to the Police by witnesses can be used by the defence only for the purpose of contradicting the prosecution witnesses. Where, however, a witness has been asked by the defence whether he had made a particular statement to the police and the Sub-Inspector of Police has also been asked whether the witness did make the particular statement to him, but neither the witness nor the Sub-Inspector are asked as to the statement the witness made to the Sub-Inspector, there is nothing to prevent the prosecution from asking the Sub-Inspector whether in fact the witness had made that statement to him. In asking such a question, there is no use of the statement recorded by the Police during their investigation, the witness or the Sub-Inspector is merely asked a question as to a certain fact. *Ghui Mian v. ———S. 162—Scope and object.

Before the present section was amended, statements made by witnesses to the police, and recorded by the police might not be used as evidence against the accused but there is nothing to prevent them being used in favour of the accused. The effect of the amended section is to restrict the privilege of the accused. He can only obtain access to written statements made by prosecution witnesses to the police, at the discretion of the Court. It is no longer a matter of right. The proviso is clearly limited to the purpose of this single concession, in derogation of the universal prohibition contained in the body of the section to the accused. He can get copy of the recorded statements of prosecution for the only purpose of breaking down the evidence of the prosecution witnesses. The proviso does not cover the case of a witness for the defence, whose statement may have been recorded by a police man, nor allows the prosecution to impeach the credit of such a witness by examining him upon any written statements he may have made to the police. A fortiori the proviso could never have been intended to allow the prosecution to impeach the credit of its own witnesses for its own purposes, and against the wish of the accused, by reference to the police testimony. Emperor v. Narayan.

In a case where the provisions of S. 162 do apply, those parts of the statement to the Police which are used in cross-examination to contradict the witness must be proved and brought on the record. This can ordinarily be done by the admission of the witness that he made the statement, or by examination of the Police Officer who recorded it. If the later course is necessary, in order to avoid delay, there can be no objection to allowing cross-examination subject to subsequent proof of the statement. Formal proof prior to the cross-examination of the witness on his previous statements is, therefore, unnecessary. If the statement, if not admitted, is subsequently not proved, the evidence based on it must, of course, be disregarded. This principle applies whether the provisions of S. 162 are applicable to the statement sought to be proved or not. Shirlal v. Emperor.

Per Young, C. J. and Bhide, J.—Where an accused makes a statement to another person in presence of the Police, whether that statement is made to the other person or to Police is a question of fact, and not of law. If it is found on the facts of any case, that a statement made to a third person, was in reality intended to be made to Police and was represented as made to a third person, merely as colourable pretence in order to evade the provisions of S. 162, Cr. P. C., the Court will hold it to be excluded by that section. But it would be going too far to lay down that every statement made to a person assisting the Police during an investigation should be treated as a statement made to Police, and as such, excluded by S. 162. The question is one of fact, and must be decided on facts of each case. Hakam Khuda Yar v. Emperor.

If, notwithstanding the form in which it has been made, the statement is, nevertheless, an admission of incriminating circumstances and is used by the prosecution as such, it is not admissible in evidence; a test as to the admissibility of a statement by accused to Police is to ascertain the purpose for which it is being put to by the prosecution. *Mohamad Yusuf v. Per Chandavarkar, J.—The use of the writing as evidence against the accused is opposed to the express terms of the section, but the statement contained in the writing could be used to impeach the credit of such witness in manner provided by the Indian Evidence Act. Per Batty, J.—The writing may be used for the purpose of refreshing the memory of the witness cross-examined as to the fact of the statement either on behalf of the prosecution or on behalf of the defence provided that it was treated by the prosecution only for the purpose of impeaching the credit or in corroboration of the witness who made it. Per Beaman, J.—The statement ought not to have been admitted at all, or its contents to have been allowed to be used by the prosecution even for the nominal purpose of contradicting the witness. The distinction between the "writing" and the "statement" which is embodied in the writing is a distinction of form rather than of substance. If the "statement" might properly be admitted and used to contradict the prosecution witness who made it, then there is no reason in principle why that statement should not be provable in the usual way and by the best evidence of it, namely, the written record of it. Emperor v. Narayen.

———S. 164—Recording of confession—Confession recorded in language not used by accused, —Prejudice.

Though a Magistrate should record confession in the language of the accused, omission to do so may be overlooked if it has not injured the accused in his defence. Where Magistrate though he recorded the statement in English, explained the various portions of the confession. There would be no prejudice to accused. Nawab v. Emperor.

A confession was recorded by a Magistrate, and at the foot of the confession, the Magistrate made the following note :—"The statement was written in my presence and hearing. It was read over to the accused and he admitted it to be correct. It contains a true and full account of the statement by him." There was a note at the head of the confession that the accused was cautioned. The Magistrate recording the confession was examined as a witness at the trial and stated that he had warned the accused : Held, that Magistrate did not comply with law but that the defect was cured. *Khemani v. Great care and circumspection are necessary in recording confession under S. 164, Cr. P. C. It is necessary to record the questions put to the accused to ascertain whether the confession was voluntary, to tell him that after his confession he will not have to go back to Police custody, to warn him of the consequence which will ensue if he falsely implicates himself in the hope of release and to ask him whether the Police or any other person

In all cases in which a confession is recorded by a Magistrate, it is advisable that he should record a memorandum of enquiry showing what steps he has taken to fully satisfy himself that the accused person is confessing voluntarily. When an accused person is placed before a Magistrate for the recording of a confession under S. 164, it is not sufficient to put one comprehensive question as to the nature of the confession or to make a note at the commencement of the record ———S. 164—Recording of Confession—Formalities, compliance with—Proof.

A warning given to a person who is about to make a confession that any statement he might make might be used against him does not comply with the requirements of S. 164. It must be explained to him that he is not bound to make a confession at all. Where it does not appear that such explanation was made to the person making a confession, the confession is not admissible in evidence. A mere statement by the Magistrate who recorded the confession that he took all the precautions prescribed by the Code is far too vague and general to enable the Court to hold that this important requirement was complied with. Partap Singh v. Emperor.

———Ss. 164, 537—Recording of Confession—Formalities not observed—Confession not recorded in prescribed form—Magistrate not putting questions to elicit voluntary nature of confession—Admissibility.

A confession was not recorded on the prescribed form. It started straight away and was entirely in the form of a narrative. There was nothing on the record to show that the Magistrate put any questions to elicit the voluntary nature of the confession. It appeared that he merely told the accused that he need not confess, and that if he did so, it could be used against him. It was doubtful as to whether the accused was really questioned as prescribed by S. 164 before the statement was taken down: Held, that the nature of the questions must be such as to show that the Magistrate made a real endeavour to find out whether the confession was really voluntary and that the confession was vitiated. *Sardar Miya v. Where an accused charged with murder made a confession before a Second Class Magistrate, who, in place of the certificate required by Ss. 164 (3), remarked that the confession was not voluntary, and where the prosecution sought to remove this defect by calling the Magistrate and examining him as to the precise points which, in his opinion, were involuntarily made; Held, (1) that the confessional statement was inadmissible in evidence, being made under circumstances diametrically opposed to those which the law requires as a condition precedent to the admissibility of a confession; (2) that the only course which the Magistrate could properly follow when he came to the conclusion that the accused was not speaking voluntarily before him was to refuse to continue to record the examination any further; (3) that it was not competent for the prosecution to supply by calling the Magistrate the deficiencies which existed in the confession from the time it was recorded. A confession must be read as a whole. Emperor v. Rama Dhan Pawar.

All that S. 164 (3) requires is that a Magistrate recording a confession on questioning the person making the confession must have reason to believe that it is being made voluntarily. No express form of questions is prescribed, and the extent to which the Magistrate should question the person making the confession must largely depend upon the particular facts of each case, whilst it is clearly desirable that he should always put such questions as may be necessary to enable him to determine whether the confession is voluntary, no particular form of questioning can be laid down as necessary.

It is the imperative duty of the Magistrate, before recording a confession, to carefully examine the accused person and, to the best of his ability, ascertain that he is not wishing to speak owing to any inducement, threat, or promise, but that this confession is purely voluntary; that this is specially necessary in a country, where the police are so prone to induce prisoners to confess, and where

—S. 164—Statements—Inculpatory in nature—Admissibility.

Inculpatory statements made under S. 161, Cr. P. C., by a person who was not treated as an accused, nor subsequently tried for any offence based on such statements, are admissible in a prosecution against him for perjury. Such statements are not 'confessions' and the Magistrate's failure to record them in the manner laid down in S. 364 does not preclude their being used in evidence. In re: Madala Ramaniyamma.

Under S. 145, Evidence Act, a witness may be cross-examined as to his previous written and relevant statements without such writing being shown to him, or being proved; but if it is intended to contradict him by the writing, his attention must, before the writing can be proved, be called to those parts of it to be used, for contradicting him. Where the Judge has asked the investigating Police Officer to verify the copies of the statements recorded in his Police diary and has used them for contradicting the statements made on oath by the prosecution witnesses without first giving each prosecution witness an opportunity of admitting or denying the correctness of the statement recorded in the special Police diary of the case, the procedure is illegal and all these true copies of statements recorded by the Police Officer in his diary and exhibited in this case are inadmissible in evidence. *Emperor v. Cr. P. CODE (1898), S. 173

S. 172, Cr. P. C., does not forbid a recorded statement to be used at a trial for an offence not under investigation when it was made. The record of a statement heard by a Police Officer in exercise of the power conferred by S. 161 of the Cr. P. C., and recorded either in the diary or separately in the course of investigation proceedings is an unpublished official record relating to an affair of State evidence derived from, which cannot be produced in a case to which the first proviso to S. 162 is not applicable except with the permission of the Officer at the head of the Police Department (S. 123, Evidence Act). The record of the statement cannot be termed a deposition or an evidence. It is not a public document, a copy of which must be given on demand under S. 76, Evidence Act. But the fact or allegation that the statement has been reduced to writing will not preclude evidence of its having been made (subject, of course, to the provisions of the Evidence Act), for S. 91, Evidence Act, does not apply. To prove that the statement was made, it would be necessary to call the Police Officer who heard it. If the accused has succeeded in having the original record of the statement produced, notwithstanding objections raised under Ss. 123, 124 or 125, Evidence Act, and the Police Officer has referred to it to refresh his memory under S. 159, the provisions of S. 145 of that Act will apply. *Baij Nath Bhatnagar v. Three persons were sent up by the Police for trial under Ss. 386 and 457, I. P. C. A remark was added to the Police report that it has been elicited that one A. had instigated the commission of the theft and that the Court is at liberty to take action against A. on legal evidence being tendered. At the conclusion of the trial against the three persons, the Magistrate ordered that a non-bailable warrant be issued against A. and he be tried under Ss. 380, 457/190, I. P. Cr. P. CODE (1898), S. 174

A report of a theft of bullock by the accused was made to the Police who submitted a report to the Magistrate that the case against the accused might be true but that the evidence to prove it was not forthcoming. Thereupon the Magistrate made over the case to an Honorary Magistrate for inquiry and report. The Honorary Magistrate examined witnesses on both sides and reported that it was proved that the bullock was purchased by the accused and that no trial of the accused could be recommended. On receipt of this report, the Magistrate ordered the issue of summons against the accused with the remark that the purchase of the animal by the accused should be proved in court: Held, that (1) upon the report of the Police under S. 173 of the Cr. P. C., the Magistrate could take cognizance of the case under S. 190, Cl. (b), but instead of doing so, he made over the case for inquiry and report as though he was dealing with the matter on a complaint under S. 200; the proceedings before the Honorary Magistrate were not in consonance with the provisions of the law; and (2) after the report of the Police and the Honorary Magistrate, the Magistrate ought not to have summoned the accused; and (3) the proceedings should not be allowed to go on. *Abdullah Mandal v. Five persons were tried by the Sessions Judge of Sukkur of offences under S. 120-B, conspiracy, under S. 366, kidnapping, and S. 420, cheating. It was not alleged in the charge that the conspiracy to abduct and the abduction was made in Sukkur where all the five accused live. The criminal conspiracy was formed, i. e. the offence was committed outside the Province of Sind and outside the jurisdiction of the Sukkur court somewhere in the United Provinces. It was also alleged that there was a further conspiracy of cheating entered into at Sukkur but the accused were not charged with this second or further conspiracy at all. It was not the case of the prosecution that the two conspiracies were part of one transaction : Held, that upon the facts of the case and the charges as framed S. 177, Cr. P. If money is to be sent to Sukkur which is dishonestly misappropriated or converted or used or disposed of within the meaning of S. 405, Penal Code, at Lucknow and is not sent to Sukkur, it cannot be said that it was mis-appropriated or converted or used or disposed of at Sukkur, nor does S. 43, Penal Code, make any difference to the case. It may be said that the failure to send it to Sukkur is evidence of dishonest misappropriation or conversion or user or disposal at Lucknow, but a jurisdiction is not to be determined by the place where evidence is to be found but by the place where the offence is committed: Jurisdiction, so far as the offence of criminal breach of trust is concerned, is quite clearly and specifically provided for in S. 181 (2), Cr. P. C. and not by S. 179. The Sukkur Court in this case has, therefore, no jurisdiction to try the offence.

On 2nd October 1905, one D. of Lahore presented a forged draft of Rs. 10,000 and got it cashed at the Bombay Office of the Mercantile Bank of India having no Branch in the Punjab. On 26th October 1905, one I of Amsitsar presented another forged draft for Rs. 7,000 and got it cashed with the help of D. at the Multan Branch of the Punjab National Bank. Both these drafts purported to be signed by M. as Manager of, and to have been issued by the Amritsar Branch of the said Punjab National Bank, which has no Branch at Bombay having the Head Office at Lahore. It was not proved by whom and where the drafts and advices were forged or, as alleged by the prosecution, the forms on which these were written were stolen from the Head Office of the Punjab National Bank. Both the accused D. and I, were jointly tried by a Magistrate of Lahore. As regards the Multan fraud, the Magistrate convicted I. under Ss. 379-109, 420 and 467, and D. under Ss. 379-109, 420-109 and 467-109, Penal Code. As regards Bombay fraud, D's convictions were under Ss. 411, 467-109 and 420, Penal Code. On appeal to the Chief Court, Punjab, conviction of D. was only upheld under S. 420, Penal Code, as regards Bombay case, and under Ss. 420-109, as regards the Multan case. The conviction of I. also was only confirmed under S. 420, Penal Code. It was contended that the trial was bad as the Magistrate at Lahore had no jurisdiction and there was misjoinder of charges and accused : Held, that under S. 179 of Cr. P. C., the Lahore Court had jurisdiction as loss to the Bank ensued at Lahore where the Head Office ———S. 182 — Criminal breach of trust—Jurisdiction to try—Accused, travelling agent, employed by firm at B, selling goods outside B and receiving money—Failure to pay money at B—Criminal breach of trust—Place of trial.

The accused was employed by a firm as a travelling salesman. He was given articles (ornaments) and he had sold some in K and returned to B, the place of business of his master. The accused did not pay the money for articles sold and a complaint for criminal breach of trust was lodged in B. The trial Court held that the goods were sold and money received was outside B, and that therefore it had no jurisdiction to try the suit: Held, that it may no doubt be difficult for the prosecution to prove that any part of the offence of criminal breach of trust was committed in B and it would have been safer to lay the venue in K or one of the places where the proceeds of the goods sold were admittedly received. The Court there would have jurisdiction, wherever the actual misappropriation took place, but since there was a doubt as to whether the criminal breach of trust was committed in K or B, that would give the B Court jurisdiction. Anthony D'Mello v. Joseph Mathew Pereira.

When under the provisions of Chap. XV two Courts subordinate to different High Courts have concurrent jurisdiction to try an offence, the High Court, within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the offender actually is, is empowered, by S. 185 read with S. 182, to decide by which Court the offence shall be tried. S. 185 is not restricted to cases in which there is doubt as to whether one Court or another has jurisdiction. It expressly refers to the preceding provisions of the Chapter. One of these provisions is S. 182, and the word 'should' includes the case of a choice on the ground of public convenience. Emperor v. Chaichal Singh.

The Sub-Divisional Magistrate of M. ordered under S. 182, Cr. P. C., that the trial may be held at M. The accused thereupon moved the District Magistrate of D. who, upon the report of a S. D. ———S. 185. 527—Construction — “Doubt”, meaning of—Jurisdiction—Form of order.

Per Woodroffe, J.—The “doubt” referred to in S. 185 is a doubt as to the competency or jurisdiction of a Court and does not include a doubt whether one or another Court should inquire into or try a case on the ground of convenience or expediency. S. 185 is not designed to cut down admitted jurisdiction, but to determine cases where the facts said to constitute jurisdiction are doubtful. The doubt as to what are the acts which are said to constitute the offence and where they were committed is not the “doubt” which is referred to in S. 185. Cr. P. C. *Charu Chandra Majumdar v. ———S. 185—Jurisdiction by consent of parties—High Court's power under section.

Per Mookerjee, J.—Jurisdiction cannot be conferred by consent of parties where there is an entire absence of jurisdiction. A narrow construction should not be placed upon S. 185. S. 185, Cl. 1, does not warrant the interference by the High Court merely upon the ground of convenience. Per Curiam (Woodroffe, J., dissenting).—Section 185 is not restricted to cases in which there is doubt as to whether one Court or another has jurisdiction, but includes cases in which the doubt arises as to the suitability of one Court as compared with another (by which the offence shall be enquired into or tried), from the point of view of convenience or expediency. *Charu Chandra Majumdar v. ———S. 185—Scope—Practice and procedure—Choice of forum—Powers of High Court.

Per Sadasiva Aiyar, J.—Section 185 was intended only to apply to and provide for the following two sets of circumstances: (1) Where two cases are pending in two Courts within the jurisdiction respectively of two separate High Courts on the same set of facts, the High Court within which the offender is found has the deciding voice ‘whether the Court within its own jurisdiction’ shall or shall not proceed against the accused. If it decides in the affirmative, the outside Court cannot proceed further, as the High Court has full powers to prevent a person who is within its jurisdiction from being taken out of that jurisdiction till the case in its subordinate Court is concluded; (2) Where only one case has been instituted in a Court subordinate to the High Court in whose jurisdiction the offender is, that High Court can decide whether the case should be enquired into and tried by its own subordinate Court or should be tried in a Court within the jurisdiction of some other High Court. *Mahomed Ghouse v. It is open to him to plead that he is a European British subject and the provisions of Ch. XXXIII, will then operate. The certificate under S. 188 does not invest the District Magistrate with jurisdiction to order the trial of a European British subject before a Magistrate of the First Class in British India as is set out in the application for revision. It was objected that the commitment was irregular and the trial that ensued was void: Held, that there was nothing to show that the word "charge" was used in S. 188 in the sense in which it was used elsewhere in the Code. Assuming that it would be more regular for the Committing Magistrate to have re-called the witnesses whom he had examined before the certificate was issued, nevertheless it had not been shown that the accused had in any way been injured or prejudiced. *Emperor v. A Native State made a requisition to the Political Agent, who was also the District Magistrate of Bijapur, for the surrender of an accused. The Political Agent issued a warrant under S. 7 of the Extradition Act, for arrest. Accused surrendered of his own accord. Upon application of the accused, the Political Agent issued certificate under S. 188, Cr. P. C., that the accused be tried in British India. The Native State pressed for the man's surrender and finally the accused was tried in the Native State: Held, that the Political Agent had no power to cancel the certificate already granted and that the subsequent trial of the accused in the Native State must be set aside. R. 3 of the Rules under the Indian (Foreign Jurisdiction) Order in Council 1902 and under S. 22 of the Extradition Act does not control S. 188, Cr. P. C. The Rule contains a reminder to Political Agents of their duty to consider the admissibility of issuing a certificate prior to issuing any warrant. A certificate under S. 188, Cr. P. The Magistrate, thereupon, took cognizance of the case against A., had him arrested and reported the case for transfer to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate. —Ss. 190, 254 — "Cognizance of an offence", meaning of—Magistrate under S. 254 framing charge different from that indicated by complaint—Whether 'takes cognizance'.

The expression "taking cognizance of an offence" in S. 190 deals with a matter of a purely technical nature. Cognizance is usually taken upon complaint when process is issued, but no restricted interpretation can be given to that expression in the consideration of the character of the action of a Magistrate at any particular stage of the proceeding before him. But the terms of S. 190 make it clear that cognizance is taken upon issue of process before evidence is recorded. It is the complaint, therefore, which gives jurisdiction to the Magistrate to try the offence. Consequently, when under the provisions of S. 254 the Magistrate thinks, upon the evidence heard, that a charge different from the one indicated by the complaint should be framed, he does not take cognizance under S. 190 (1) (c); for the power to frame a charge in a warrant case of the offence disclosed is inherent in the jurisdiction assumed by the Magistrate upon the original complaint. Baburao Tatyrao v. Emperor.

—S. 190 (1) (a)—Cognizance—Cognizance is of offence and not of offenders.

It is not a condition requisite for the initiation of proceedings in a Criminal Court that there should necessarily be a person named as the offender. The Magistrates mentioned in S. 190, Sub-s. (1), are empowered to take cognizance of an offence whether or not the complaint before them charges any particular individual or individuals with having committed the offence. *Fateh Muhammad v. S. 476 has no reference to jurisdiction. If then in respect of one of the offences enumerated in S. 195 (1) (b) committed in or in relation to any proceeding in any Court that Court or some Court to which that Court is subordinate has proceeded under S. 476 and filed a complaint, the bar under S. 195 is removed; the Magistrate before whom the complaint is lodged takes cognizance of the offence under S. 190 (1) (a) and thereafter proceeds to inquire into complaint and to deal with it according to law, using for this purpose all the powers vested in him by the Code. If an offender is named in the complaint, the Magistrate will proceed against him. If, on inquiring into the complaint, other persons appear to be involved therein by the evidence recorded by the Magistrate, he is entitled to proceed against those others under the powers conferred upon him by S. 190 (1) (a) and S. 195 (1) (b) cannot possibly bar him from doing so. *Fateh Muhammad v. Cr. P. CODE (1898), S. 190

———S. 190 (1) (b)—Police report—Meaning of.

The Police report mentioned in S. 190 (1) (b) of the Cr. P. C. is a Police report within the meaning of S. 173 of the Code, i. e., a report during investigation of a cognizable offence. Ram Lal v. Emperor. 21 Cr. L. J. 269 : 55 I. C. 285 : 1 P. L. T. 73.

———S. 190—"Police report," what amounts to.

The report of the Police is not restricted merely to reports under Chap. XIV upon information lodged to the Police but embraces all reports by the Police submitted under S. 24 of the Police Act. An application by the Police to a Magistrate to take action against a person amounts to a "Police report" within the meaning of term in Cl. (b) of S. 190. Abdul Ali v. Emperor. 22 Cr. L. J. 9 : 59 I. C. 41 : 1 P. L. T. 446.

———S. 190—"Police report", what is.

The term 'Police report' in S. 190 is not limited to the report mentioned in S. 170. A report made by the Police in a non-cognizable case under the order of a Magistrate is a Police report. Sarferaz Khan v. Emperor. 14 Cr. L. J. 218 : 19 I. C. 314 : 11 A. L. J. 331.

———S. 190 (1) (b)—Police report, what is.

"Police report" in S. 190 (1) (b) includes all kinds of Police reports, and not only reports under Chap. XIV or reports in cognizable cases. Emperor v. Nga Thauung. 1 Cr. L. J. 1047 : U. B. R. 1904 3rd Qr., C. P. C. 25.

———Ss. 190 (1) (b) and (c) and 191—Police report—(Burma Act No. IV of 1899), S. 29—Penal Code Ss. 223, 225-A 366, and 375—Proceedings against Police Officer—Whether sanction is necessary—By whom sanction be granted—Reports included in "report of a Police Officer" and "Police report".

Police constable Nga Nyun, went to the St. John's Leper Asylum to arrest Po Saw, for an offence under S. 366 or S. 376 of the Penal Code. He along with Nga Thauung, constable, and Po Maung, a block-elder, after permission of the Superintendent of the Asylum, arrested Po Saw. Po Saw struck Nga Nyun and ran off. Nga Thauung, did not prevent escape. He was sent for trial under S. 29 of the Police Act and fined. The District Magistrate referred the case for the orders of the High Court on the following grounds, viz., (a) that the District Superintendent of Police applied for the District Magistrate's sanction and in the latter's absence, sanction was given by the Headquarter's Assistant Commissioner, Mr. Scott, for the District Magistrate; (b) that the same officer in his capacity of Magistrate tried the case; (c) that Mr. Scott could only take cognizance under S. 190 (1) (c) of the Cr. P. C. because the Police report on which he did take cognizance was not a Police report within the meaning of S. 190 (1) (b) and he did not comply with S. 191, Cr. P. C.; (d) that the punishment was inadequate and that the trial should be under S. 223 of the Penal Code: Held, that no sanction was necessary, as proceedings were initiated by the District Superintendent of Police, that Judicial Department Circular No. 22 of 1892 deals with prosecutions otherwise initiated, and that, if a sanction had been necessary, Mr. Scott was not competent to grant it "for the District Magistrate": Held, also that S. 190 (b) of the Cr. P. C. includes all kinds of Police reports and not only reports under Chap. XIV, or reports in cognizable cases; there was no illegality involved in Mr. Scott's trial without the application of S. 191 Cr. P. C.: Held, further that on the evidence the question arose whether an offence under S. 223 (or 225-A) of the Penal Code had been committed; the respondents should have been prosecuted for the more serious offence; the S. 29 of the Police Act provides for cases of misconduct, which do not fall under some section of the Penal Code or other law. Emperor v. Nga Thauung. 2 Cr. L. J. 322 : 11 Bur. L. R. 135.

———S. 190 (b)—Power and duty of Magistrate—Magistrate taking cognizance of offence on Police report—Action against persons not mentioned in report.

The fact that the Police in a report submitted under S. 173 of the Cr. P. C., have not mentioned all the parties concerned in the offence, does not debar a Magistrate from taking action against persons not mentioned in the Police report. Once a Magistrate has taken cognizance of a case and proceeds to deal with the evidence before him, it is his duty to see that justice is done with regard to any other person that may be suspected of being concerned in the offence. His action against such persons would fall under S. 190, Cl. (b) and not Cl. (c) of the Code. Mehrab v. Emperor. 26 Cr. L. J. 181 : 83 I. C. 885 : 17 S. L. R. 150 : A. I. R. 1924 Sind 71.

A District Magistrate should not take cognizance under S. 190 (1) (c) of offences which have been made the subject of a Police report and which have not yet been finally disposed of by a Subordinate Magistrate. If he thinks it necessary to continue the proceedings against the accused, the proper procedure to be adopted is to transfer the case to his own file under S. 528, Cr. P. C. *Ghana Mahapatra v. Even if there is complaint of the Court as regards the principal offender before the Magistrate, he can add the abettors of that offence as co-accused, because S. 190 refers in terms to "offence" and not "offender", and a Magistrate having taken cognizance of an offence, can add co-accused. *Assudomal Ramdas v. Purely as a matter of procedure, the proper course for a Magistrate taking cognizance of an offence and of opinion that certain persons who have not been sent up by the Police, but who have been mentioned as accused persons should be included in the charge-sheet is to call upon the Police to put forward a supplementary charge-sheet embodying the names of such persons. *Raghupat Narayan Singh v. The report of a Revenue Surveyor is a complaint and not a Police report. If the Magistrate proceeds under S. 190 (1) (a) he must examine the complaint thoroughly. He can proceed under Cl. (c) if specially empowered and is bound by the provisions of S. 191. Before issuing process the Magistrate should endeavour to ascertain if the grazing ground has been finally demarcated under Rule 68 of the Rules under the Lower Burma Land and Revenue Act and whether its boundaries are defined by visible marks or are otherwise well-known. A plea that the accused did not know that the land which he cultivated was in a grazing ground is a good ground of defence and although the burden of proving it is on the accused, it must be investigated. *Emperor v. It is most desirable that a Magistrate taking cognizance of an offence under S. 190 (1) (c), should place on record the ground on which he is taking action, and this not only in fairness to the person against whom action is so taken, and who is entitled to know for what reason he is being arrested but also for his own protection. His omission, however, to do so, does not necessarily vitiate the proceedings, where the accused has not in any way been prejudiced. Maung Nyi Bu v. Emperor.

The provisions of S. 190 are exceedingly wide. Nothing in that section prevents a Sub-Divisional Magistrate from taking cognizance of an offence that happens to be reported to him by an officer who presides in a Court of Justice. Civil Judge is certainly a public servant and when the Magistrate takes cognizance of an offence upon a report of the Civil Judge, it is not necessary that he should be examined before the Magistrate as a complainant. ——— S. 195 (1) (a)—District Judge's lawful power if can be used to annoyance or injury of Subordinate Judge.

The District Judge has lawful power which he can use to the injury or annoyance of a Subordinate Judge under him. Under S. 24, C. P. C., and S. 22 (2) of the Bengal, N.-W. P. and Assam Civil Courts Act (XII of 1887) the District Judge has power of his own motion to transfer suits and appeals pending on the file of a Subordinate Judge to some other competent Court, and the exercise of such a power by the District Judge on receiving information about corruption on the part of a Subordinate Judge would manifestly be to the annoyance, if not also to the injury of the Subordinate Judge. *Government Advocate, Bihar v. Absence of the sanction under S. 195, Cr. P. C., or the sanction having become ineffective under S. 195 (6), does not entail the reversal of conviction unless it is shown to have occasioned a failure of justice. The fact that an objection as to absence of sanction was taken at the beginning of the trial before a Magistrate would not of itself indicate that a failure of justice has occurred. *Pirbhu Dial v. Before the trial was concluded, the Code was amended and the procedure with regard to sanction was abolished: Held, that the trial was not affected by the amendment of the Code inasmuch as the Court having taken cognizance of the case lawfully, its jurisdiction to try the case to its conclusion was not ousted by the subsequent amendment of the Code. In re: Appaswamy Iyer. 27 Cr. —S. 195—Appeal, competency of—Order in appeal, efficacy of.

An order passed by the Court of Appeal is in law the order which ought to have been passed by the Subordinate Court and will, therefore, have the same efficacy and operation as the order which ought to have been passed by the latter. A petition under S. 195, Cr. P. C., by way of appeal lies against the order of a District Judge granting sanction and passed in an appeal preferred from the order of a Subordinate Judge refusing sanction in respect of offences alleged to be committed before the Court of the Subordinate Judge. Under S. 195 (b), Cr. P. C., a petition by way of appeal lies to the High Court in every case in which a Civil or Criminal Court subordinate to it within the meaning of Sub-s. 7 (a) gives or refuses a sanction whether in respect of an offence committed before it or one committed before a Court subordinate to it, and in the latter case, whether it gives a sanction refused by the Subordinate Court or revokes a sanction accorded by such Court. *Palaniappa Chetti v. —S. 195—Appeal—Powers of Appellate Court—Remand, legality of.

S. 195, Cr. P. The right of appeal conferred by S. 195 (6), Cr. P. C., as read with Sub-s. 7 is not restricted to a right of appeal to the Appellate Court to which the Court of first instance is immediately subordinate. An appeal lies to the High Court not only in cases where the Court of first instance refuses sanction and sanction is granted by the Court to which that Court is immediately subordinate, but also in cases where the Court of first instance grants sanction and the sanction is revoked by the Court to which that Court is immediately subordinate. *Muthusami Mundali v. Under S. 195 (1) (c), Cr. P. C., relevant date which has to be considered is the date at which a Court is invited to take cognizance of the complaint. At that moment the Court has to ask itself whether it is debarred from taking cognizance by reason of the provisions of S. 195, and in cases falling under S. 463 or S. 471, Penal Code, the Court has to see whether the offence in respect of which it is asked to take cognizance is alleged to have been committed by a party to any proceeding in any Court and in respect of a document produced or given in evidence in such proceeding. It is immaterial that the offence had been committed by a person before the proceedings are taken and if at the time when the Court is asked to take cognizance of a complaint the accused is a party to proceedings, in a Court in which the document has been produced or used in evidence, then the bar contained in S. 195 (1) (c), applies. *Emperor v. ———S. 195—Application—Application for leave to sue, whether judicial proceeding—Sanction refused by lower Court.

An application was made in the small Cause Court, Calcutta, on behalf of the defendant, for sanction to prosecute the plaintiff, under S. 209, I. P. C. for having fraudulently and dishonestly and with intent to injure and annoy the defendant made a claim which he knew to be false and also under S. 193, I. P. C. for having, in an application for leave to institute a suit, knowingly and intentionally made a false statement when legally bound to state the truth. The Judge of the Small Cause Court refused the sanction, on the ground that the statements were not made in the course of a judicial proceeding and that there had been an undue and unreasonable delay in making the application. Defendant then applied to the High Court, and the learned Judge who heard the application came to the conclusion that the statement had been made in the course of a judicial proceeding, and that the delay had been explained away; and he made an order that the matter should be further investigated by the learned Judge of the Small Cause Court and that that judge should determine, upon the materials placed before the Court and having regard to his decision, whether or not sanction should be granted: Held, (1) that the order of the learned Judge of the High Court was a "judgment" within the meaning of Cl. 15 of the Letters Patent and that an appeal lay against that order under that clause; (2) that under S. 195 (6) the sole power given to the learned Judge of the High Court was to revoke a sanction given or to grant a sanction refused by the subordinate Court and that he had no power to remand the case for further enquiry and decision by the Small Cause Court. *Budhu Lal v. One B. presented complaint to the District Magistrate alleging that A had given false evidence as witness in a criminal trial in the Court of the Honorary Magistrate, 2nd Class, and praying that A might be punished for this offence. B was not a party to the case and apparently had no personal concern with the proceedings in Court. On this complaint, the District Magistrate ordered A's trial for giving false evidence and made the case over to a First Class Magistrate : Held, (1) that the District Magistrate's order could not be supported by S. 195 or S. 476, Cr. P. C. as (a) no application for sanction under S. 195 had been made and no such application was granted ; (b) A's statement was not made before the District Magistrate ; and it was brought under his notice not in the course of a judicial proceeding, but on the complaint presented to him by B ; (2) that as S. 195, Cr. P. C., had not been complied with, the complaint presented by B to the District Magistrate, with a view to his taking cognizance under S. 190 (1) (a), should have been summarily dismissed ; (3) although in view of S. 529, Cr. P. C., the mere fact that the District Magistrate has erroneously taken cognizance of an offence under S. 190 (1) (a) would not by itself be sufficient ground for interference on revision, yet as the case had not yet gone to trial, and it did not appear to be one in which sanction, if it had been applied for, could properly have been given, and as B's complaint was not instituted in the interest of justice, but apparently, it was merely intended to give trouble to an enemy, the irregularity became material, and the order for prosecution must be set aside. *Abdul Jamal v. —S. 195—Complaint by Court.

A and M entered into a conspiracy to injure a rival in business by getting him adjudicated insolvent. In pursuance of this conspiracy, A and M procured the forgery of certain warrants for the attachment of immovable property belonging to the rival. M thereafter filed an application against the rival to get him adjudicated an insolvent. After an inquiry by the Insolvency Court the application to adjudicate was dismissed and the Insolvency Court made a complaint against A and M charging them with an offence punishable under S. 120-B read with Ss. 466 and 109 of the Penal Code. On this complaint the Magistrate, to whom the case was made over for disposal, framed charges against A and M under S. 120-B of the Penal Code. On appeal, the High Court set aside the complaint so far as it related to A on the ground that the Insolvency Judge had no jurisdiction to lay a complaint against A who was no party to the insolvency proceedings before him. The Counsel for the complaint thereupon drafted and presented a complaint against A in the same terms as the one which had been laid by the Insolvency Judge. On this complaint the Magistrate took proceedings against A and a joint trial of both A and M proceeded. During the course of the trial, objection was taken to the jurisdiction of the Magistrate to proceed against A in the absence of any complaint or consent such as was required by S. 196-A of the Cr. P. C. The Magistrate thereupon framed alternative charges under Ss. 466 and 109 of the Penal Code against both accused : Held, (1) that A not having been a party to the proceedings before the Insolvency Judge, he was not a person who came within the purview of S. 195 (1) (c) and that, therefore, as regards him the proviso to Sub-s. (2) of S. 196-A of the Code did not do away with the necessity for the sanction of the Local Government to the initiation of proceedings against him; (2) that as regards A, therefore, the Magistrate had acted entirely without jurisdiction and the whole of the proceedings against him were void and illegal; (3) that the Magistrate having acted without jurisdiction against A, the defect in the proceedings could not be cured by framing an alternative charge which required no complaint or consent; (4) that the charge originally framed by the Magistrate against M was a charge which was not set out in the complaint made by the Insolvency Judge and that it was a charge which fell under Sub-s. (1) of S. 196-A of the Cr. P. C. of which the Magistrate could not take cognizance without a complaint by the Governor-General-in-Council or by the Local Government; (5) that, therefore, the proceedings of the Magistrate as against M after the framing of the charge, were without jurisdiction and the alternative charge subsequently framed by the Magistrate could not be allowed to stand. *Abdul Rahim v. The accused filed a complaint in Court against certain persons charging them with dacoity. After his complaint he was sent for by the Police and made a statement to a Police Officer saying that he had filed a complaint in Court and that certain persons had committed dacoity in his house. The Police upon investigation found that the complaint was false and a superior Police Officer charged him with false accusation and the accused was put on his trial for an offence under S. 211 of the Penal Code : Held, that the accused having filed his complaint in Court before he made a statement to the Police Officer, Police Officer was not competent to proceed against the accused and that the accused could not be tried for the offence charged without a complaint by the Court before whom he has filed his own complaint. *Ghaslwan Singh v. The Magistrate directed the Police Officer to submit a report for prosecution under S. 182, Penal Code, and on receipt of the report, issued summons to the petitioner under S. 182 : Held, (1) that the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to prosecute the petitioner either under S. 182 or S. 211, Penal Code, on the complaint of the Police Officer as S. 195 (1) was a bar to his taking cognizance of the case except on the complaint of the Magistrate himself; (2) that it was, at all events, improper if not illegal, to prosecute the petitioner before the final disposal of the complaint made by the petitioner either under S. 203, Cr. There is no law which renders it obligatory on a Magistrate, before starting a prosecution under S. 182 or S. 211, Penal Code, to allow an opportunity to the person who is to be prosecuted to prove the truth of the information or charge in respect of which it is proposed to prosecute him. *Jokhi Mian v. It is undesirable, that where a case has been taken into Court, it should thereafter be open to the Police to evade the provisions of S. 195 of the Cr. P. C., by filing a complaint under S. 211, Penal Code, on the complaint by a Police Officer; the wording of S. 195 (1) (b) is quite wide enough, to require that in such circumstances the Court itself shall make a complaint. A person made a report to the Police that certain named persons had cut and taken away some of his trees. The Police did not prosecute these persons, and the complainant thereafter filed a complaint of theft in Court. Subsequently the Police filed a complaint against the complainant under S. 211 Penal Code: Held, that the complaint under S. 211, Penal Code, was a complaint of an offence alleged to have been committed in or in relation to a proceeding in a Court. Hence prosecution under S. 211, Penal Code, could not proceed

A Magistrate directing the issue of a warrant to search premises, on information received that the owner or occupant thereof is in possession of fire-arms without a license, acts as a Court and not merely as a public servant, whether he purports to act under the Cr. P. C., or under S. 25 of the Arms Act. Where a District Magistrate accords sanction for the prosecution of an informant on the ground

One N brought a criminal complaint against H in the Court of a Naib-Tahsildar after obtaining a medical certificate of injuries from Dr. M. Complaint was then dismissed in default. H then applied in the Court of the District Magistrate, that action should be taken under Ss. 193 and 467, Penal Code, against N and Dr. M for giving false certificate and the matter was referred to the Additional District Magistrate for disposal. The Additional District Magistrate ordered the complaint to be made against Dr. M only under Ss. 193 and 465, Penal Code. On appeal, the Sessions Judge maintained the order under S. 193 but held there was no case under S. 465 : Held, that the words "Courts to which appeals ordinarily lie" in S. 195 (3), Cr. P. C. meant in the present case the Court of the District Magistrate and not the Additional District Magistrate. The complaint was, therefore, lodged without jurisdiction. If the District Magistrate had directed the Additional District Magistrate to make an enquiry and report to him and had then adopted that report and made the complaint himself, the procedure would have been quite legal. *Nazar Mohammad v. A Court in sanctioning a prosecution arising out of the trial of a civil case before it should not be supposed to be discharging that which is the task of the Committing Magistrate at a later stage and usurping his functions by explicitly or tacitly pronouncing that there is a prima facie case. A Court which allows sanction does no more than say that, on the materials before it, it is not apparent that a prosecution would be against the public interests or a mere indulgence of private spite. On the other hand, a Court which refuses sanction does no more than express the opinion that public interest would not be served by such a prosecution and it is not debarred from acting upon that view even where there is a strong prima facie case. A Court before whom an application for the grant of a sanction is made is invested with wide discretion with the exercise of which an Appellate Court should be extremely slow to interfere. *Munuswamy Mudaliar v. It is not the function of the Court that accords sanction for a prosecution to require the same strictness of proof that Courts are wont to demand before they pronounce an accused person guilty. The object of the provisions of S. 195, is merely to prevent prosecutions by private persons on their own motion and to secure there being a prima facie ground for prosecution by requiring the sanction of the Court. Apart from the existence of a prima facie case in cases where sanction to prosecute is applied for, the Court should see if there are good grounds for thinking that a prosecution is necessary in the interest of justice. *Veeraraghavaswami Naidu v. A common sense view of the matter would be that the Judge acted as a Court under the impression that he had jurisdiction to make a complaint under S. 476 read with S. 195, Cr. P. Under the provisions of S. 476, Cr. P. C., as amended, a Civil Court has only authority to make a preliminary inquiry and record a finding in the case of an offence covered by S. 195 (1), Cls. (b) and (c) but not Cl. (a). In the case of an offence covered by Cl. Where, therefore, it is stated before a Munsif that certain persons had resisted a Civil Court attachment and it is alleged that they had committed offences punishable under Ss. 183 and 186 of the Penal Code, the Munsif has no jurisdiction to take action under the provisions of S. 476, Cr. Proceedings under S. 195 are of a judicial character, and no order should be passed in such proceedings without giving notice to the party in those proceedings to whose prejudice the Court decides to pass an order, and an omission to give such notice is a defect of procedure resulting in a failure of justice, and consequently the defect is not curable by S. 537 of the Code. *Muhammad Yusuf Ali v. Before sanction to prosecute under S. 195, Cr. P. C., a notice should be issued to him asking him to show cause against the grant of sanction. Such notice may not be legally necessary but it is desirable it should be given. The omission to give notice, taken into consideration with other circumstances; for instance, the fact that the sanction is vague or is in excess of the Magistrate's power, is a sufficient ground for setting aside, on revision, an order granting the sanction. *Charan Das v. The purpose of S. 195, is not, that one Court should keep check upon another, because if that were so, the Court itself would not be entrusted with the making of a complaint as it is under the provisions of the section. The purpose of the section is to provide, inter alia, that an offence of forgery, for instance, shall be inquired into upon a complaint of a Court before which the forged document was produced and not upon the complaint of a private individual. It is the Court before whom the forged document is produced which is to decide whether there should be or should not be an inquiry in the first instance, and as a Court is entrusted by the Legislature, with this discretion and with this power, it is entitled itself to inquire into an alleged offence committed in relation to proceedings before it, when that alleged offence is part of the same transaction, with the offences of which the Court has already taken cognizance and the Magistrate can, in such a case, convert the proceedings before him into one for committal to the Court of Sessions. *Jashanmal J. The Courts should not tolerate evasion of the provisions of S. 195, Cr. P. C., or of the intention of the legislature, but, the Court must be careful not to extend the provisions of the section which restricts the right of a subject to have recourse to the Courts. The principle to be followed in cases of this kind is not whether the complaint discloses other facts which constitute offences for which no complaint of the Court is necessary as well as facts for which a complaint of the Court is necessary, but whether there is or is not an evasion of the provisions of S. 195, Cr. P. C., and the test whether there is evasion or not is whether the facts disclose primarily and essentially an offence for which the complaint of the Court is required. *Sadhuram Chimandas v. S. 195 (1) (b), Cr. P. C. aims at providing that where, prior to the institution of a criminal prosecution, a properly constituted judicial tribunal has placed itself in a position to determine whether the facts constituting the offence really exist, the Criminal Court should decline cognizance unless that the tribunal has, in effect, certified that in its opinion the complaint is one worthy of investigation. ———S. 195 (6), (7) (c)—Object of—Interpretation.

The apparent intention of the Legislature in inserting Cl. (c) of Sub-s. 7 of S. 195, Cr. P. C. was to substitute the control of the District Judge as the "principal Court of original jurisdiction" in respect of all suits of a civil nature for that of the Sessions Judge. The provisions of this clause govern the procedure in respect of sanctions granted or refused by Courts of Small Causes. Courts must read Sub-s. (7) along with Sub-s. (6) and must endeavour to place a reasonable construction on all the words of the Statute. The "such appeals" spoken of in clauses (a) and (b) are the appeals which "ordinarily lie." The use of the word "only" in Sub-s. (7) does not operate so as to take away altogether the subordination imposed upon any Court by Sub-s. (6) but merely to limit that subordination to one single Court, whereas it might otherwise have extended to two or more. The words "that is to say" must be interpreted loosely as equivalent to "I will make my meaning clear by the following explanations." The effect is that the subordination of a Court of Small Causes to the local High Court, which would otherwise be imposed by Sub-s. (6), is "for the purposes of this section" done away with, but the subordination of the Court of Small Causes to the District Judge as "the principal Court of original jurisdiction" in suits of a civil nature "within the local limits of whose jurisdiction" the said Court of Small Causes "is situate" remains and is affirmed. Chidda Lal v. Bhajan Lal.

The principal underlying S. 195 is plainly this. Where an act amounts to the offence of contempt of the lawful authority of public servants or to an offence against public justice, such as giving false evidence or to an offence relating to documents actually used in a Court, private prosecutions are barred absolutely and only the Court in relation to which the offence was committed may initiate proceedings. *Ramasawmi Ayyangar v. ———S. 195—'Offence', meaning of.

In S. 195 (1) (c), Cr. P. C. the word 'offence' is designedly used in a somewhat abstract manner. It is the 'offence' itself, not any particular offender's offence which the section aims at; and that is in accordance with S. 40, Penal Code, where 'offence' is defined as the thing made punishable by the Code. The clause deals with the case where there is a substantive offence committed by a party to a suit. If that condition is realized, then the clause enacts that no Court can take cognizance of such offence. In re : Narayan Dhonddev Risbud.

———S. 195—Order of sanction, contents of.

No sanction is necessary under S. 195, Cr. P. C. for a prosecution under S. 467 or S. 476, Penal Code. An application for sanction must set out in detail, the statements alleged to be false. The order of sanction, however, need not state specifically what false evidence was given or fabricated, and a sanction might be a perfectly proper sanction without setting out the actual words in which it is alleged the offence was committed. But it is certainly in accordance with the requirements of justice that the order of sanction should not be a vague order leaving the accused in doubt as to the charge which he will be expected to meet, and in the case of a long deposition, containing statements alleged to be false, it is particularly desirable that some indication should be given of the portions of the deposition so alleged to be false. Proceedings, with a view to the prosecution of a witness for giving false evidence, should not be taken until a conclusion has been come to by the Magistrate or Judge conducting the trial in which the false evidence is supposed to be given upon the evidence given therein. Thawin v. Nga San.

No prosecution can be instituted in respect of offences specified in S. 195, Cr. P. C. which have been committed in or in relation to a proceeding in a Court unless the Court itself prefers a complaint and the person who is the subject of the complaint has a definite right of appeal to a superior Court against the institution of the complaint, it is not the function of the High Court, unless the circumstances are altogether outside the ordinary, to examine in revision the merits of such a complaint with a view to discovering whether it is likely to result in conviction. To do so, is the task of the Magistrate before whom the complaint is laid and there is nothing to prevent him from dismissing it without issuing process to the accused person. Similarly when a Magistrate presiding over a Court and a Court of Appeal are agreed that a prosecution is necessary, then unless the case is one which has peculiar features, it would be extremely difficult for the High Court in revision to declare that the prosecution is not in the interests of public policy. *Behram v. V, C. 61), S. 107—Civil Procedure Code Act (V of 1908), S. 115.

The petitioner applied to a Subordinate Judge for sanction to prosecute the opposite party for using as genuine a certain document which they alleged was a forgery. The Subordinate Judge having refused to grant sanction, the District Judge was moved and he also refused to sanction on ground that there was no clear prima facie case against the opposite party. The petitioner then moved the High Court against the order of the District Judge refusing the sanction: Held, that the application to the High Court was not maintainable either under S. 107, Government of India Act, or under S. 115, C. P. C. or under Sub-ss. (6) and (7) of S. 195, Cr. P. C. An application for sanction to prosecute is made under S. 195, Cr. P. C. The fact that it is made to a Civil Court is immaterial. A section of the C. P. C. cannot be invoked to deal with a sanction granted under a section of the Cr. P. C. Sarat Chandra v. Ram Sashi Roy.

———S. 195 — "Sanction", meaning and essentials of—Direction to prosecute, whether sanction.

It is not essential to the validity of a sanction under S. 195, Cr. P. C. that it should be addressed to a particular complainant for it only removes the bar put by the section on the jurisdiction of the Court. But sanction implies the existence of a person who desires to prosecute, and it is not desirable that it should be so indefinite as to be capable of being used by any possible prosecutor. A sanction is quite distinct from a direction to prosecute. A sanction leaves the private prosecutor to exercise his unfettered discretion as to whether he will proceed or not. An order expressly ordering a prosecution is, therefore, not a sanction. The order of a Magistrate ordering a prosecution suo motu is not a sanction. Dodumal v. Emperor. 17 Cr. L. J. 305 : 35 I. C. 481 : 10 S. L. R. 65 : A. I. R. 1916 Sind 94.

———S. 195—Name of the person to whom it is granted.

The sanction contemplated by S. 195, Cr. P. C. is not a sanction to any particular person to prosecute but a sanction to the Criminal Courts concerned to take cognizance of certain offences specified in that section of which the Criminal Courts cannot take cognizance except with the previous sanction or on the complaint of the authority described in that section. The sanction, whilst it is in force, restores to the Criminal Courts a jurisdiction of which the same section deprives them in respect of specified offences and need not even name the accused. In re : Mowjee Liladhar. 3 Cr. The Magistrate found that certain recitals in the Panchnama were false and that the charge imputed to the Talukdar was false. He discharged the Talukdar and directed the prosecution of A. under S. 211, Penal Code. A. did not appear before the Magistrate in the case against the Talukdar. A. applied to the Sessions Judge, who found that the order of Magistrate was an order for sanction under S. 195, but that no such sanction was necessary in the circumstances of the case before A. could be prosecuted: Held, that A. could not be prosecuted without preliminary sanction because: (a) the offence imputed to A. was the instigation of the false charge against the Talukdar which took the form of a trial; (b) even if the offence of instigation was committed before the proceeding in Court was begun, the instigation was not committed in relation to the proceeding held by the Magistrate against the Talukdar. In re: Khanderao Yeshwant.

It would be a dangerous doctrine to hold that in every case where a comparison of the deposition of a witness before the Committing Magistrate with his evidence given at the trial, discloses contradictory statements, sanction to prosecute him for perjury should be granted. ———S. 195—Sanction to prosecute—Discretion of Court—Principles governing exercise of—Appellate Court, interference by.

No sanction should be granted under S. 195 unless upon the record itself there is a foundation for the charges made. In granting sanction under S. 195, the Court should be satisfied that there shall be no abuse of the administration of criminal justice: No one should be permitted to use the Penal Law merely to satisfy his own private ends or personal spite.

Cr. P. CODE (1898), S. 195

Where a lower Court has exercised the discretion vested in it under S. 195 with great care and caution and has refused sanction to prosecute, an Appellate Court should not lightly dispose of the matter and grant the sanction. In such a case, it is essential that the Appellate Court should be satisfied that there is a reasonable prima facie case fit to be tried, and that there is a reasonable chance of securing a conviction and should give reasons for differing from the view of the lower Court. Bachan Ram v. Mohit Ahir.

If a Court is of opinion, on evidence that no reasonable Jury would convict on it, it is its duty to refuse sanction. But the mere fact that a Court sanctions a prosecution is no intimation to the Magistrate who is to enquire into the case that it thinks that there is a case to go to Jury or that he thereby is in any way relieved from his duty of considering whether the accused ought to be committed for trial. *Munuswamy Mudaliar v. The duty of a Court granting sanction is discharged if it exercises a judicial discretion, and similarly, the duty of the Appellate Court if it satisfies itself that such a discretion has been exercised. The former Court must, therefore, be required, to put on record that its exercise of discretion has been judicial, and it is undesirable in fairness to the accused that it should do more. In case it does less, the Appellate Court will have no choice but to ascertain the necessary facts for itself and base its conclusions on them. The former Court cannot be regarded as having exercised a

Although no hard and fast rule can be laid down as to the manner in which an inquiry should be made under S. 195, it is necessary that the inquiry should be complete in every detail. An inquiry confined to an examination of the accused and his witnesses is not sufficient. The inquiry should proceed on the allegations made by the party who asks for sanction and on the basis of materials placed by him before the Court, and the Court should abstain from pronouncing any opinion on the merits of the case. *Kakka Gope v. Where there is a conflict of opinion between an Original Court and an Appellate Court as to the truth or falsity of any evidence, oral or documentary, the case is not one in which sanction to prosecute for falsely giving or fabricating that evidence should ordinarily be accorded. The object of the law in requiring sanction to prosecute is to restrain the exercise of private spite or desire for revenge and to secure that, prosecutions shall only take place, where the interests of public justice make it necessary to have them. *Amolak Chand Hemraj v. Omission to specify statements in respect of which a prosecution is sanctioned is not in itself a sufficient ground for revoking the sanction. The Court before granting sanction must be satisfied that there is reasonable probability of conviction. The withdrawal of a suit by a plaintiff cannot be construed as an admission that the note sued on was not executed by the defendants. It is at most an admission that plaintiff cannot prove execution, Principle.

The true rule regarding grant of sanction to prosecute is that the Judge should be satisfied that there is a reasonable prima facie case, fit to be tried. ———S. 195—Sanction to prosecute.

S. 195 (1) (c) applies to parties and not to witnesses. Therefore, no sanction is required to prosecute a witness for producing a forged document. Therefore, where sanction to prosecute a witness under Ss. 182, 469 and 471, Penal Code, is given by one Court and revoked by the superior Court, the revocation does not affect the right of any person to prosecute a witness under Ss. 469 and 471. A Magistrate trying a case should pay no attention to any directions given to him by the District Magistrate or other Magistrate extra-judicially as to how he should dispose of the case. *Bassarmal Awatmal v. —S. 195—Sanction to prosecute—Technical grounds—Sanction not to be granted in absence of reasonable prospect of conviction.

When a Court is invited to sanction a prosecution because an offence against public justice has been committed, the ends of justice ought not to be allowed to be defeated on technical grounds. But it should be remembered that a sanction ought not to be granted merely because there is room for suspicion that an offence may have been committed. The Court is bound to satisfy itself that there is at least a prima facie case, and that if a sanction is granted, there is a reasonable prospect of a successful termination of the prosecution about to be instituted. *Mathura Sahu v. ———S. 195, 476—Sanction to prosecute—“Subordinate”—Whether the successor of a Judge can take proceedings under the sections.

S, a Sub-Divisional Officer, commenced proceedings under S. 476, Cr. P. C. Before passing the final orders, he reverted to his substantive post of a Deputy Magistrate in the same Sub-Division. His successor C, thinking that S was subordinate to him, gave sanction under S. 195 (1) (b) of the Code : Held, that C had no authority to proceed under S. 195 (1) (b), as S was not subordinate to him within the meaning of S. 195 (7). C could, however, take action under S. 195 or 476 of the Code as the offences had been committed in his own Court though not when he was the presiding officer. Bholu v. Emperor.

When a Court proceeds under S. 476, Cr. P. C., it may or may not make a preliminary inquiry as it may consider necessary. But if a Court admits any evidence in sanction proceedings under S. 195, Cr. P. C. it acts without jurisdiction. The only question for the Court under that section is whether there is a prima facie ground for sanctioning a prosecution. The section does not say on what materials and on what evidence a Court should act before granting or refusing sanction. It simply vests the Courts with discretion which must be exercised judicially, i. e., with due care and caution. But if a Court admits or takes evidence before granting sanction under S. 195, Cr. P. C., its order of sanction would not become invalid and revocable on that ground. In re : Karvirappa.

The District Registrar had a departmental enquiry and concluded that the complaint was false. He then forwarded a report to himself as District Magistrate, and as such sanctioned the prosecution of the petitioner under Ss. 182 and 211, Penal Code : Held, that, if the Magistrate acted under S. 195, Cr. In sanctioning the prosecution of a person, the Court should abstain from giving anything like an analysis of the materials submitted to it for the purpose and avoid expressing any opinion as to the probability or otherwise of a conviction. All that a Judge in giving sanction is called upon to do is to feel that the matter is one which, on the face of it, requires investigation by a magisterial Court. A claimant in insolvency proceedings who files an affidavit in support of his claim before the Official Assignee, who is empowered as a subordinate officer of the Court to investigate it, is a party to the proceedings before the Court within the meaning of S. 195 (1) (c). The High Court can, therefore, in the exercise of its insolvency jurisdiction, sanction the prosecution of the claimant for false statements contained in such affidavits. In the matter of: Hajee Mohammad Ilibillah Badsha Sahib.

—S. 195 (6)—Sanction to prosecute, object of granting—Evidence, nature of.

The object of granting sanction to prosecute is to remove the statutory bar to the prosecution of offences mentioned in S. 195, Cr. P. C. but that bar cannot be removed by a mere application for sanction; a prima facie case must be made out for setting the Criminal Law in motion against the accused, and the evidence must be such that, if unrebutted, the accused can be convicted; particularly when the evidence is circumstantial, it must be of a nature incompatible, upon any hypothesis, with the innocence of the accused. To justify a sanction for the prosecution of a plaintiff under S. 209, Penal Code, the mere dismissal of his claim is not enough, it must be shown that the claim he was making was to his knowledge false, the mere fact that he over-estimated his case and claimed more than what was his legal due, would not necessarily show this. *Rammandan Prasad Narayan Singh v. Under S. 195, Cr. P. C., a Subordinate Magistrate granted sanction to prosecute for offences under Ss. 193 and 211, Indian Penal Code, to a private individual. No complaint having been preferred by the private individual, the Police, relying upon the sanction, preferred a charge-sheet under S. 211, Indian Penal Code, to the Joint Magistrate who was authorised to entertain appeals under S. 407 (2) of the Cr. P. C. The Joint Magistrate struck the case off his file, revoking suo motu the Subordinate Magistrate's sanction under Sub-s. (6) of S. 195, Cr. P. C. : Held, that the Joint Magistrate, though authorised to entertain appeal from the Court of a Subordinate Magistrate under S. 407 (2) is not the Court to which appeals from the Court of the Subordinate Magistrate ordinarily lie within the meaning of S. 195 (7) and, therefore, he had no authority to act under Sub-s. (6). The District Magistrate alone can revoke or grant sanction under this sub-section. He cannot, on the authority of S. 407 (2), delegate his own powers under it to a Joint Magistrate. The mere fact that a complaint has been made in pursuance of a sanction would be no bar to a Court competent, under Sub-s. A Judge of a High Court sitting in the exercise of Original Civil Jurisdiction is a Court subject to the Appellate Jurisdiction of that High Court, so where a Judge in the exercise of such jurisdiction grants, or refuses to grant, sanction to prosecute, an appeal lies by virtue of Cl. (7) of S. 195, Cr. P. C., to the same High Court on the Appellate Side. Quare.—Whether an order refusing to grant sanction to prosecute under S. 195, Cr. P. under Court's disciplinary powers—Liability for false statement in affidavit.

S. 195 is expressed in the widest terms and vests in the Court an absolute and unqualified discretion. Not one jot or one tittle can be taken away from or added to the plain and express provisions of the Legislature by any decision of the Court, nor can this discretion vested by the section in the Court, be crystallised or restricted by any series of cases and it remains free and untrammelled to be fairly exercised according to the exigencies of each case. An application for sanction is not to be conducted on the same lines as the criminal trial which may be its sequel. When a Tribunal is invested by an Act or by rules with a discretion, without any indication in the Act or the rules of the grounds upon which the discretion is to be exercised, it is a mistake to lay down any rules with a view to indicate the particular grooves in which the discretion should run. When exercising discretion, the Court will be astute to see that there should be no abuse of the administration of criminal justice. Therefore, no one should be permitted to use a Penal Law merely to satisfy his own private ends or personal spite. An Attorney can make an affidavit by way of answer to a Rule issued against him under the Court's disciplinary jurisdiction, and for a false statement in the affidavit, he is criminally liable. *Hume v. The intention of the Legislature in enacting S. 195, Cr. P. C., was, inter alia, to give authority to a certain Court for giving or refusing sanction when sanction had been given or refused under this section. Cl. 7 was inserted to point out the authority to which such power was given, it was never intended to be a clause creating or disestablishing any Court. To guard against confusion which might arise round the use of the word "subordinate", the term was limited for the purposes of this section and the interpretation was made to refer to three different classes of cases (1) cases in which appeals lay to more than one Court; (2) cases in which appeals lay to a Court of Revenue and a Civil Court, (3) cases in

The expression "that is to say" in S. 195, (a), is not comprehensive but is only illustrative, and to some extent, limits the effect of the preceding words. The correct construction of the section is that power to revoke sanction is granted to a Court which ordinarily hears appeals from the sanctioning Court, and where there are two Courts having the function of hearing appeals, or where there is no Court, power to revoke is given to that Court to which the sanctioning Court is subordinate. *Muniswami Mudaliar v. Under S. 195 (b), Cr. P. Consequently the Additional District Magistrate cannot make a complaint under S. 193, Penal Code, for offence committed in the Court of Second Class Magistrate, the reason being that Second Class Magistrate cannot be deemed to be subordinate to the Additional District Magistrate within the meaning of S. 195 (b), Cr. Where a Subordinate Judge refuses to grant a sanction under S. 195 of Cr. P. C. a District Judge has, on appeal, jurisdiction to pass an order under S. 476 of the Code, but in doing so, he should himself proceed according to S. 195 (b) read with S. 476 of the Code. In re: Lakshmidas Lalji. 7 Cr. Cr. P. CODE (1898), S. 195

—S. 195 (1) (c)—Scope—Complaint of offence under S. 193, Penal Code—Power to prosecute whether confined to parties.

Court has power to file a complaint of an offence under S. 193, Penal Code, against a witness even if when he gave his evidence he was not doing so as a party to the suit but as a witness. Nothing in S. 195 (1) (b), Cr. P. C., confines the power of the Court to persons who are parties to the proceedings. It is S. 195 (1) (c) which confines the power of the Court to parties to the proceedings, and there it is in respect of documents and not of oral evidence. Emperor v. U Kaddoc. 37 Cr. L. J. 1008 :

The expression "produced or given in evidence" in S. 195 (1) (c) of the Cr. P. C. means tendered or admitted in the antecedent judicial proceedings. Mere mention of a document in the affidavit of documents and that it is filed in the office of the Court Translator for translation does not amount to its being "produced or given in evidence". *Munuswamy Mudaliar v. In considering whether a prosecution is to be ordered or not, it is desirable to have regard to the interests of public justice rather than to the gratification of private spite. Regard may also be had to the question whether the prayer for prosecution is a manoeuvre to obtain an undue advantage by embarrassing the defence in a pending civil proceeding. Another point which might well be considered is whether there is evidence of any criminal act against each individual person against whom it is proposed to take proceedings and with reference to the general question whether there is a prima facie case at all, it may be examined whether the person offended against was in fact following a lawful procedure. The process-serving staff were not under the rules then in force subordinate to the individual Courts issuing process for service by them. But the position has since been altered by an amendment of R. 24, at p. 16, Vol. I of the Patna High Court's General Rules and Circular Orders (Civil). Bajrang Marwari v. Durga Prosad Sao.

S. 408, Cr. P. C., makes sentences of a Magistrate appealable to the Court of Sessions and under S. 409, read with S. 9 of the Code, an additional Sessions Judge has jurisdiction to hear such appeals. For the purpose of S. 195 (7), therefore, a Magistrate is subordinate to an additional Sessions Judge and consequently an Additional Sessions Judge has jurisdiction to grant sanction refused by a Magistrate. A Court should give reasons for granting or refusing sanction. Nishi Chandra Chaudhury v. Romesh Chandra Sen.

A Collector acting under Ss. 69 and 70, Bengal Tenancy Act, is a Court within the meaning of S. 195, Cr. P. C. Proceedings under Ss. 69 and 70, Bengal Tenancy Act, are of a civil nature and the Collector's Court trying such proceeding must be deemed to be subordinate for the purpose of S. 195, Cr. P. C., to the principal Court of original civil jurisdiction in the District, i. e., the Court of the District Judge. Per (Richardson, J., hesitating).—The principal Court of original jurisdiction within the meaning of S. 195, Cl. 7, does not necessarily refer to a Court of any particular class. It is a Civil or Criminal or Revenue Court as the case may be. The words "where no appeal lies," in cl. 7, S. 195, Cr. P. C., are wide enough to include both a particular case or class of cases in which no appeal lies as well as a Court from which no appeal lies in any case, e. g., a Small Cause Court. Although these words in Cl. 7, S. 195, Cr. P. C., are capable of such a wide meaning, yet the Legislature referred to Courts whose decisions are made final by law, e. g., Small Cause Court. Chandi Charan Giri v. Gadadhar Prodhan.

P. C., and their creditors with abetment. Process was issued, but, before its hearing, the complainant asked for the sanction necessary under S. 195 (b), Cr. P. C. It being granted without hearing, the judgment-debtors approached the Agent's Court, alleging that the complaint was entertained without sanction, and that no notice had been given them before the sanction was granted: Held (in revision) that (1) as all civil appeals from that court lay to the Agent's Court, it was that court which should be approached to get the sanction revoked; (2) that the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to issue process, he being bound to examine the complainant at once on oath under S. 200, Cr. P. P. C. (4) that, while it was not legally necessary that notice should be given, nevertheless it was highly desirable that notice should be given: that, when a court has given sanction upon legal evidence, recorded by itself, or upon judicial records (which were themselves a guarantee of due enquiry) it was perhaps not always necessary to give the accused a chance of clearing himself: that, as there was no final order in this case, the provision in S. 537 (b), Cr. P. C., did not apply; the principle being that where a final order or decision had been given, want of sanction would not be a good plea, unless the accused had been materially prejudiced; and that if there was no final order, there was no reason why an error of this kind should not be corrected while there was still time: Held, also that the Magistrate could have acted under S. 476, Cr. P. C., but that, as he did not do so, that section did not apply; and that though there were rulings to show that sanction given and trial conducted by the same authority in two different capacities, was not illegal, the accused might reasonably apply for transfer (to the District Magistrate). *Bhagat Jethsur Jiva v. The sanction of a Local Government to prosecute a person for an offence under S. 124-A, Penal Code, communicated by telegram must be proved to have emanated from the Government. The Court is forbidden by the express provisions of S. 88 of the Evidence Act to make any presumption as to the person by whom the telegram is sent. A sanction given after the filing of a complaint does not fulfil the requirements of S. 196, Cr. P. C. Where the object of a conspiracy is to commit forgery, there can be no prosecution for such a criminal conspiracy without the sanction of the Local Government under S. 196-A of the Cr. P. C. But this is not so, where the main charge is that of cheating, in which it is not necessary at all to mention, as the object of the conspiracy, forgery committed not for its own sake but in order to cheat a person in a way in which, if he had known the fact, he would not have parted with the money. If cheating is carried out by means of forgery, it does not follow that the provisions of S. 196-A of the Cr. P. C. would apply. For a prosecution of an offence of forgery, no sanction is necessary under S. 196-A and no distinction can be drawn between the offence of forgery and the offence of abetment thereof. *Bishambhar Nath Tandan v. A large crowd of men assembled at a village and agreed among themselves to proceed in a body to a certain Police Station there to threaten and to obstruct the Sub-Inspector of Police and the Policemen with him in the discharge of their duty and then to proceed to a certain bazar and stop the sale of intoxicants, meat, fish, etc. It was also agreed that if the Sub-Inspector of Police did not act in a certain manner and offered resistance, he and the Policemen with him would be assaulted. The crowd then proceeded towards the Police Station and on arrival there, started an altercation with the Sub-Inspector of Police. Their behaviour and attitude was such that if they had been called upon to disperse they would not have done so. During the course of the altercation, the members of the crowd began to throw stones at the Police. The Police then fired, killing two men and wounding several others. The mob inflamed to fury then murdered the Police Inspector and several other Police and chaukidars. Some of the members of the crowd were charged with offences under Ss. 120-B and 302 read with S. 149 of the Penal Code and were convicted of the latter offence at one trial: Held, that the charge against the accused being that the events which occurred at the Police Station followed upon the alleged criminal conspiracy arrived at between the accused at the village and were so connected therewith, not merely by sequence of time but by the link of causation, as to make the conspiracy at the village and the subsequent assault on the Policemen at the Police Station parts of the same transaction, within the meaning of that expression in S. 239 of the Cr. P. C., the joint trial of the accused was perfectly justified; that in order to decide whether the joint trial of the accused was or was not legal, the Judge had to look to the case for the prosecution as set forth in the charges themselves and that it was not necessary for him to consider what the position would be if he eventually came to the conclusion either that no offence punishable under S. 120-B was committed by any of the accused or that if any offence was so committed, it was one excluded from his cognizance by S. 196-B of the Cr. Proceedings against the accused were started upon a report made by an Excise Inspector in which the nature of the case was set out as one under S. 9 of the Opium Act read with S. 120-B of the Penal Code. Warrants for arrest were issued for offence under S. 9 of the Opium Act, and the proceedings went on as being under the said section only. The Excise Superintendent when examined as a prosecution witness, produced an order of the Government, dated 12th September, 1925, consenting to initiation of proceedings against the accused under S. 120-B of the Penal Code read with S. 9 of the Opium Act. A charge under S. 120-B, Penal Code, with S. 9 of the Opium Act, was then framed and the accused convicted: Held, that the Magistrate took cognizance of the case under S. 120-B of the Penal Code not when he issued the warrant, but only when he framed the charge and inasmuch as the date of framing the charge was subsequent to the order of the Government giving consent to the prosecution, the trial was not illegal for want of previous consent under S. 196-A, Criminal Procedure Code. *Ali Mia v. ———S. 196-A—Object—Committal after magisterial inquiry or conviction after full trial on charge of conspiracy—No previous sanction—No prejudice to accused—Want of sanction if makes conviction improper.

It was with a view to safeguarding citizens against prosecution on frivolous charges of criminal conspiracy that S. 196-A, Cr. P. C., was enacted at the same time as S. 120-B, Penal Code, insisting upon the previous approval of Government or of some senior and specially empowered Magistrate before such proceedings can be even initiated. If this safeguard is ignored by Magistrates, they should be suitably admonished. But when a case has been initiated and has ended in conviction, it is obvious that there never was any innocent person to be protected from persecution. In other words S. 196-A was designed not as a loophole of escape for persons committed after full magisterial inquiry on a charge of criminal conspiracy or convicted after full trial of criminal conspiracy. If proceedings are initiated without formal sanction and end in the conviction of certain persons for criminal conspiracy, the conviction should be upheld unless it can be shown that any one of the persons convicted was prejudiced by the formal defect complained of. In re : Mallimoggala Venkataramiah.

———S. 196-A (2)—Sanction—Object of conspiracy, to commit non-cognizable offence—Sanction under S. 196-A (2), whether essential to give jurisdiction to Court—Object of conspiracy when and how to be determined.

The jurisdiction of the Court to take cognizance of an offence of conspiracy under S. 120-B, Penal Code, depends according to the terms of S. 196-A (2), Cr. P. C., upon the object of the conspiracy. If the object is to commit non-cognizable offence, undoubtedly sanction under that section is essential to give jurisdiction to the Court. The object of the conspiracy has to be determined at the initial stage not only by reference to the sections of the penal enactment referred to in the complaint but also upon the facts narrated therein and the evidence tendered before the Magistrate. There is a cognizable difference between the object of a conspiracy and the means adopted to realize the object. If they are separable, then, even if the object is sought to be attained by resort to non-cognizable offences, no sanction is necessary. It does not matter if the object is erroneously mixed up with the statement of method of attaining it in the body of the complaint. It is perfectly open to the Magistrate upon the evidence to dissect the facts in order to decide the question of sanction. Ramchandra Rango Sawkar v. Emperor. 40 Cr. L. J. 579 : 181 I. The considerations which arise in a case to which S. 197 is applicable are essentially different from those considerations of policy which underlie the grant of sanction under S. 196. Girdhari Lal v. Emperor.

S. 197—Applicability—Acting or purporting to act in the discharge of official duty, meaning of.

The words 'while acting or purporting to act' in the discharge of his official duty in S. 197, imply that there must be something in the nature of an official character attached to the act itself, that the act must in fact be done or purported to be done as an official act in pursuance of the public office held by the public servant. *Amanat Ali v. S. 197—Applicability.

For the application of S. 197, it is not sufficient that the accused should be a public servant at the time of the offence. The accused must also be a public servant at the time when he is accused, that is at the time when the accusation is made against him either by a complaint or a Police report. Where, therefore, the accusation was made against the accused before the Magistrate at the time when he had ceased to be a public servant, the sanction is not necessary. *Suraj Narain Chaube v. In order to attract the provisions of S. 197, the act must be so connected with the official duty as to become inseparable from it. It must be so connected with the official act as to form part of the same transaction. Ram Singh v. S. R. Rizvi.

S. 197 applies to acts committed by a public officer, although these acts were not part of his public duty. If he committed the act under

In the case of a criminal breach of trust by a public servant, it would be essential to show before S. 197 would be applicable, that misappropriation had taken place as an official act or at least under the cloak of what purported to be an official act. The mere fact that property was entrusted to the accused as a public servant and his position as a public servant afforded him an opportunity for the commission of the offence is not enough. *Amanat Ali v. Ss. 197, 195, 196—Applicability.

There is a marked distinction between the classes of offences dealt with in S. 195, clauses (b) and (c), and those dealt with in S. 197. A Court granting sanction under S. 195, Cls. (b) and (c), does so in connection with offences committed in or in relation to any proceeding in such Court, and it therefore acts in its judicial capacity in granting or refusing the sanction upon legal evidence. But the Government in according or withholding sanction under S. 197 for the prosecution of a public servant in respect of an offence alleged to have been committed by him as such public servant, acts purely in its executive capacity, and the sanction need not be based upon legal evidence. The Government does not act in a judicial capacity, nor does it exercise a judicial function in authorising or sanctioning a prosecution under S. 196 and 197. There is nothing in the word "sanction" to "import a judicial element into the act of the executive." In re : Kalagava Bapiiah.

It was part of duty of an Excise Sub-Inspector to sign certificates in respect of goods imported in bond into Afghanistan; he did sign the certificates knowing that the goods to which they referred had never been so imported and not only was he enabled to do this by his official position but it was essential to the success of his conspiracy to deceive the Treasury Officer that he should purport to do so in his official capacity and that he should lead the Treasury Officer to believe that he had done so: Held, that in signing the certificates in the manner he purported to act in discharge of his official duty. Accordingly before he could be prosecuted for doing so, it was necessary that sanction should have been given by the authority empowered to remove him from office, namely the Local Government. For want of sanction, the trial Magistrate acted without jurisdiction when taking cognizance of his alleged offence: Held, further, that where a Magistrate tried all the accused in a joint trial, though he was not empowered to try one of them, the sanction of the Local Government being necessary for his prosecution and such sanction not having been obtained, the proceedings of the Magistrate were void not only against such accused but the whole trial against all the accused was void as being without jurisdiction. *Emperor v. While exercising the functions referred to to in Part IV of the Chota Nagpur Encumbered Estates Act, relating to the settlement of debts, the manager is a Judge within the meaning of S. 9 of the Penal Code. That being so, S. 197, Cr. P. C., debars his prosecution on a charge of any of the offences alleged to have been committed by him while acting, or purporting to act, in the discharge of his official duty. This section has been completely recast by the Amending Act of 1923. The amendment has widened the scope of the section and now protects the persons referred to in it, not only in respect of offences committed while acting in the particular capacity referred to in the section, but in respect of offence committed while acting, or purporting to act, in the discharge of official duties also. That the Manager under Chota Nagpur Encumbered Estates Act, is an official there can be no doubt. S. 21 of the Chota Nagpur Encumbered Estates Act, declares that every Manager appointed under the Act shall be deemed a public servant within the meaning of the Penal Code. In his capacity as manager, it is his duty to pass bills for work done by the Contractor, so that, while passing the bill or bills, the Manager is acting in his official capacity and in discharge of his official duty, and, if it is found that he has committed an act at a time when he was doing (or purporting to do) an official duty, this will be sufficient to attract the provisions of S. 197 of the Cr. P. C. And consequently sanction for his prosecution is necessary and the proceeding without such sanction can be quashed. Hemendra Nath Gupta v. Emperor.

A member of a non-City Municipal Board is removable by the Commissioner under S. 40, U. P. Municipalities Act, and hence cannot be described as a person not removable from his office save by or with the sanction of a Local Government or some higher authority. He cannot, therefore, claim protection of S. 197, Cr. P. C. At the stage when the Magistrate has to decide whether he can take cognizance of the offence or not, the question whether the offence with which the Municipal Commissioner is charged is one for which the Commissioner would or would not eventually have the power to remove him does not arise at all. *Sohan Lal v. S. 197—Object.

The object of sanction under S. 197 is that a public servant should not be unduly harassed, and the word "institution" should not be given a very narrow meaning. In one sense it is true, a Court takes cognizance of a matter as soon as it makes any order, however formal, but, even if such formal orders are considered to have been made without jurisdiction, this flaw will not affect orders made after the defect has been removed and the Court is properly seised of the case. In dealing with all technical objections of procedure, the final test is whether or not the accused has in any way been prejudiced by the alleged irregularity. Manzur Ali v. Emperor.

S. 197—Object.

The policy of the Legislature in enacting S. 197, is to afford a reasonable protection to the public servants in the discharge of their official functions and this policy cannot be defeated by having resort to the view that : "At the time of committing the offence the public servant cannot be said to be discharging public duty." *Kali Prasad Singh, Chairman, Municipality, Buzar v. It could not be said that he immediately ceased to be acting in his official capacity, the moment his lips began to utter abusive words. The provocation, so to speak, for the acts complained of had an immediate bearing on the official duties of the accused. A committal can be quashed only when it is made under one of the sections mentioned in 215 and a committal made under S. 526 cannot be so quashed. The sanction ordered by Government under S. 197 cannot be held to be null and void for the reason that no notice was given to the accused to show cause why such sanction should not be given. It is a matter left entirely to the discretion of Government whether such opportunity should be given to the person concerned before sanctioning his prosecution and the Criminal Court before which he is prosecuted is not an appellate authority over Government in the matter of the sanction. There is a marked distinction between the classes of offences dealt with under S. 195 (1), (a), (b) and (c) and it does so in connection with offences committed in or in relation to any proceedings in such Court and the Court, therefore, acts in its judicial capacity in granting the sanction upon legal evidence. But the Government, in according or withholding sanction under S. 197 for the prosecution of a public servant, acts purely in an executive capacity and that sanction need not be based upon legal evidence. No particular form is prescribed by the Criminal Procedure Code for the sanction required under S. 197. Acting Sessions Judge v. Kalagara Bapiiah.

————Ss. 197, 190—Scope—S. 197, Criminal Procedure Code and S. 270, Government of India Act, 1935, difference between—Expression "taking cognizance."

Per Blacker, J.—There is a fundamental difference between S. 270, Government of India Act and S. 197, Cr. P. C. S. 270 creates a bar to the "institution" of proceedings, that is to say, to the act of a complainant making a complaint or of a Police Officer making a report as well as to the act of a Magistrate, taking cognizance upon such complaint or report. What is barred by

Cr. P. CODE (1898), S. 197

S. 197, Cr. P. C., is not the making of a complaint or the submitting of a Police report but the act of a Magistrate in taking cognizance of the offence on such complaint or such report or in any other way. It is an error to regard the taking of cognizance as a single momentary act which can only be done once with regard to a particular offence. The taking of cognizance is a continuous act which commences as soon as the Magistrate applies his mind to the case and only ends when the Magistrate no longer has seisin of it. Consequently if a Magistrate has purported to take cognizance of an offence before the necessary sanction is received, it is only what he has done up till that time that is void and cannot be revived. This, however, does not mean that after the sanction has been received, he cannot commence to take valid cognizance. The complaint or Police report not being invalidated by the absence of the sanction under S. 197 is still in legal existence and can form the legal basis for the taking of fresh cognizance under S. 190. In this view all that is to be seen is whether S. 537, Cr. P. C. is applicable to the circumstances of the particular case. Arjan Singh v. Emperor.

Under the present section it is not necessary to decide whether the fact of the accused being a Judge or a public servant was a necessary element in the offence or whether the offence was one which could not have been equally committed by a private person and if it is found that the Judge, Magistrate or public servant has committed the act at a time when he was doing, or purporting to do an official duty, this will be sufficient to attract the provisions of this section. *Jujjavarapu Gangaraju v. —S. 197—Sub-Inspector of Police—Sanction to prosecute—He is removable from office without sanction of Local Government in view of S. 7, Police Act (V of 1861)—No sanction to prosecute him is necessary.

The expression "any public servant who is not removable from his office save by or with the sanction of the Local Government or some higher authority" in S. 197 (1), Cr. P. C., does not include public servants whom some lower authority has by law or rule or order been empowered to remove. The provisions of S. 243, Government of India Act, 1935, show that S. 7 of the Police Act is applicable in the case of a Sub-Inspector of Police and in view of S. 7 of the Police Act as amended by Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937, it cannot be said that the Sub-Inspector of Police is a public servant "who is not removable from his office save by or with the sanction of the Provincial Government or some higher authority", and this being so, S. 197, Cr. P. C., does not apply to him and no sanction for his prosecution is necessary. The power to dismiss, suspend or reduce any Police Officer of the Subordinate rank conferred by S. 7, Police Act, on the Inspector-General and other officers is not a delegation of its power by the Provincial Government. *Maqbool Hussain v. Where a complaint clearly charges an offence under S. 211, Penal Code, a conviction under S. 500, I. P. C., is illegal. A complaint of an offence under S. 500, Penal Code, made not by the person aggrieved but by his official superior cannot be accepted inasmuch as such acceptance would defeat the object of S. 108. The words "falsely charges" in S. 211, Penal Code, must be restricted to a charge made to some person in authority, that is to say, to some person who is in a position to get the offender punished. The charge must be embodied either in a complaint to a Magistrate or in a report of a cognizable offence to a Police Officer. The fact that the information given by him is shown to be false does not cast upon the party who is charged with an offence under S. 182, Penal Code, the burden of showing that when he made it he believed it to be true. The prosecution must make out that the circumstances were such that the only reasonable inference was that he must have known or believed it to be false. Gaya Barhai v. Emperor.

The husband of a woman complained that the accused won over his wife, who had recently attained puberty, enticed her away and persuaded her to carry off certain jewels and money, the property of the complainant. The complaint contained no specific allegation of enticing away the woman with the necessary sexual purpose; but in his examination upon oath by the Magistrate he made a definite allegation that the accused took away the woman with a view to have illicit intercourse with her. The accused was convicted of an offence falling under S. 498 of the Penal Code: Held, per Wallis, C. J., and Ayling, J., that although the complaint contained no specific allegation of illicit intercourse, it could not be read as merely relating to a theft of jewels, and that the conviction under S. 498 of the Penal Code was not illegal: Held, per Wallis, C. either case it is his duty to dismiss the complaint. On the other hand, if the Magistrate comes to the conclusion that the facts alleged by the complainant disclose an offence, and in his opinion, there is no ground for distrusting the complainant, the Magistrate would not be justified in refusing the issue of process merely because some other person has been tried and acquitted upon the same charge and the same facts, inter alia, it may be that at the previous trial the Magistrate had not correctly appraised the value of the evidence or for some other reason the order of acquittal cannot be supported. *Subal Chandra Namadas v. length to satisfy himself as to his veracity and as to any points on which the complainant is silent. If the result of such examination is that he finds no prima facie reason to distrust the complaint and he is satisfied that the facts alleged before him constitute a criminal offence, it is incumbent on him to issue process forthwith. If, on the other hand, he distrusts the complaint altogether or comes to the conclusion that no offence is made out, it is equally his duty to dismiss the complaint. It is only in a case where he distrusts the complainant, but his distrust is not sufficiently strong to warrant him to act upon it, that it is open to him to postpone the issue of process pending further inquiry as contemplated by S. 202, provided he records his reasons in writing for adopting this intermediate course. *Crowder v. Subsequently on the report of a Subordinate Magistrate who held an enquiry into the matter, the District Magistrate in charge wanted to examine a certain woman, Lochu, before passing final orders; but for some unexplained reasons, on the date fixed for the examination of the woman, the said Deputy Magistrate recorded the following order :—"I have gone through the evidence and find there is a prima facie case against the accused. Call for A form, and Lochu being a creature of his, need not be examined;" Held, that the order passed by the Deputy Magistrate directing the police to send up A form against the accused, was without jurisdiction and must be set aside, inasmuch as the Deputy Magistrate passed the order without having proceeded in accordance with the provisions of S. 200 or 202, Cr. P. Inspector-General of Police, Bhopal, with the previous sanction of Governor-General-in-Council lodged a complaint against the editor, printer and publisher of an Urdu Weekly Riyasat, for publishing an article tending to excite disaffection towards the Chief of Bhopal State or his Government or Administration in Bhopal in the Court of a Magistrate having two-fold jurisdiction, namely that of a Headquarters Magistrate and that of a Magistrate exercising jurisdiction over Railway lands in Bhopal State. The Magistrate in consequence of his two-fold jurisdiction was subordinate to two different High Courts. The complainant applied for amplification of his complaint by the inclusion of Itarsi as one of the places where the offending article was published. The Magistrate made the following order. "The result of this petition for amplification will be that the case will henceforward cease to be a Railway case for State-administered areas if it was one and be transferred to my ordinary file of criminal cases of this Court. This be done." On this the accused objected that the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to hear the case as he had transferred a case from a Court subordinate to one High Court to another Court subordinate to another High Court which the Governor-General-in-Council alone could do by a notification in the Gazette of India. Held, that the Magistrate in his capacity as a Railway Magistrate could not deal with the complaint of an offence committed at Itarsi but he could do so in his capacity as Headquarters Magistrate. Held, further, that as the original papers filed by the complainant contained material clearly amounting to an allegation of publication at Itarsi, the Railway Magistrate for Bhopal was not bound to dismiss the complaint in its entirety. He could return the complaint for presentation to the Court that could try the offence committed at Itarsi and this was what he did in substance. Diwan Singh v. Emperor. 32 Cr. L. J. 130 :

When a complaint is made in writing and it is sufficiently clear, it may frequently be a sufficient compliance with the provisions of S. 201, if the Magistrate reads over the complaint to the complainant and asks him to subscribe it on oath. When, however, the written complaint is obscure and vague, then the Magistrate would be bound to examine the

The mere fact that in order to make his case more serious, a complainant alleges the commission of an offence which could not be tried by a junior Magistrate does not render the proceedings of that Magistrate illegal if he goes on to try the case and decide it holding that the facts disclosed show that it is lesser offence which he is competent to try. But, in any event, it is settled law that in a warrant case the trial does not commence until the charge is framed under S. 254, and there is nothing illegal or invalid in a Magistrate of the Third Class proceeding to enquire into a complaint which was not instituted in his Court but sent to him under S. 192, or S. 528 even if after hearing the prosecution case he has to come to the conclusion that a case has been made out which he himself could not try. There is specific provision in S. 346 which provides for such cases and its existence of this very provision by itself implies that a Subordinate Magistrate can legally enquire into a serious offence up to the stage at which the question of charge or discharge has to be decided. S. 201 is not a bar to the hearing of the case by the Naib-Tahsildar. Painda v. Gulab Khalun.

—————S. 202—Cross-examination by Magistrate.

The hands of the inquiry Magistrate are not tied in the matter of questioning the witnesses when they are produced under S. 202. It would be dangerous to lay down hard and fast rules as to how far the Magistrate should go in trying to elicit the truth from the witnesses when he is conducting an enquiry behind the back of the accused. It is commendable on the part of the Magistrate to show keenness in finding out the truth or falsity of the case before he gives the accused person the trouble of appearing before him in response to a criminal charge. Therefore, the anxiety of the trial Magistrate to get at the truth and his intensive cross-examination of the witnesses for that purpose are no grounds in law for directing a further inquiry. *Gul Mohammad v. ———S. 202—Inquiry—Accused, right of, to appear.

Proceedings under S. 202 are not proceedings inter partes. They are instituted and conducted by a Magistrate in order that he may be able to satisfy himself whether there is any ground for issuing process and it is not until process is issued that the matter becomes a case. An accused person, therefore, has no right to be present while a Magistrate is holding an inquiry under that section. It may often be a matter of convenience both to allow the accused to be present and to allow any legal adviser to watch the proceedings. But the grant of such a concession is on the part of the Magistrate a mere act of the grace and the accused has no innate right to it. It is, however, irregular to allow legal advisers of persons against whom there is a complaint to cross-examine witnesses or to allow legal advisers of complainant to examine witnesses in such proceedings. *Almaram Udhowdas v. S. 202—Inquiry—"Watching proceedings," meaning of.

If any person interested in any legal proceeding is admitted to watch or applies to watch such a proceeding, the term "watch" does not mean that of a mere on-looker for idle curiosity, but it means instructing of legal practitioners to watch the case on behalf of the alleged offender and with the leave of the Court to assist the Court in making the preliminary investigation. Therefore, a person with regard to whom a preliminary inquiry is being held under S. 202, should be admitted to watch the proceedings, and his representative, if an Advocate or Pleader, should be allowed to act as amicus curiae. *Sheikh Akbar v. The complainant then made complaint in Court and the Magistrate held an inquiry under S. 202, Cr. P. C. Before the Magistrate, the complainant's witnesses repeated what they had stated to the Police and the Magistrate did not record their statements and eventually dismissed the complaint under S. 203, Cr. P. C. On revision : Held, (1) that the Cr. P. C. makes no provision with regard to the manner in which the evidence in an inquiry under S. 202, should be recorded and that although ordinarily a summary of the statements of the witnesses produced in such inquiry should be made for further reference, there was no practical difficulty in the present case inasmuch as the

At the same time, if a Magistrate having the duty of making an inquiry under S. 202, can make his enquiry more complete and can inform himself of the facts more fully by having the accused in Court, there is no reason either in common sense or in law why the accused should not be called to inquiry. *Ram Saran Singh v. ———Ss. 202, 340—Inquiry—Accused, right of, to intervene—Accused, meaning of.

A person against whom a complaint is preferred, does not become an “accused person” for the purposes of S. 340, until the Magistrate acting under Chapter XVI of the Code has decided to issue process against him. Consequently he is not entitled to intervene in a preliminary inquiry held under Sub-s. (1), S. 202, as if he were a party to the proceedings, though he may, if he chooses, watch them like any other member of the public. Sheikh Chand v. Mohammad Hanif. 3 Cr. L. J. 20 : 4 N. L. R. 81.

———S. 202, 476—Inquiry—Accused right to appear and cross-examine witnesses—Sanction to prosecute—Directing prosecution under S. 476, Cr. P. C.—Order when to be made—Order by whom to be made.

The petitioner complained against the opposite party of having committed certain offences. On this, the following order was passed on January 2, 1912—“Complainant to prove his case. Accused may cross-examine.” Subsequently the complaint was dismissed and the prosecution of the petitioner was ordered under S. 211, Penal Code. The case then came before the High Court which held that until the accused had been properly tried, the proceedings under S. 211 should be dropped. They were tried and acquitted by Mr. McGavin, Deputy Magistrate, on August 1. Another Deputy Magistrate on August 23, directed the prosecution of the petitioner under S. 476, Cr. P. C. The District Magistrate then observed that the order ought to be passed by Mr. McGavin who thereupon under S. 476, Cr. P. C. on September 16, ordered proceedings to be drawn up under S. 211, Penal Code: Held, that the order of January 2, 1912, was absolutely illegal; that if Mr. McGavin had thought that action ought to be taken under S. 476, Cr. P. C., he ought to have passed the order when he acquitted the accused; that the fact that he did not do so indicated very strongly that he did not at the time think it necessary and that the belated order of the 16th September did not represent his independent judicial opinion; and that as there was no judicial proceeding before the other Deputy Magistrate, his order of August 23, was altogether beyond his jurisdiction. *Bhim Lal Shaw v. ———S. 202—Investigation—“Local investigation,” meaning of.

The local investigation referred to in S. 202 is not restricted to the investigation of the physical features only: it means an enquiry into the truth or falsity of the allegations made in the complaint petition. The word ‘local’ is used with a view to hold the investigation in the locality for the convenience of the parties and their witnesses, and it may also necessitate in certain cases an inspection of the place of occurrence. The word ‘investigation’ is not defined in the Code. It must be taken to have been used in its ordinary sense. Munshi Mian v. Emperor. 19 Cr. L. J. 126 : 43 I. C. 414 : A. I. R. 1918 Pat. 172.

An inquiry or investigation under S. 202, is designed to afford the Magistrate an opportunity of either confirming or removing such hesitation as he may feel in respect of issuing process against the accused. The nature of the inquiry varies with the circumstances of each case and it is certainly not contemplated that it should always be exhaustive. Such an enquiry is not a preliminary trial of the accused at which he is entitled to adduce his evidence before process can issue upon him. The provision is enabling and not obligatory. The High Court will not ordinarily interfere with the details of an enquiry or investigation under S. 202, and particularly will not do so on the ground that it was inadequate. Parmanand Brahmchari v. Emperor. 30 Cr. L. J. 354 : 116 I. C. 46 : I. R. 1929 Pat. 286 : 10 P. L. T. 618 : A. I. R. 1930 Pat. 30.

In determining whether process ought to issue, a Magistrate must proceed according to the provisions of the Code, and if, after carrying out the instructions therein contained, he is of opinion, upon the materials before him, that a prima facie case has been made out, he ought to issue process, and in such circumstances, he is not entitled to refuse to issue process merely because he thinks that it is unlikely that the proceedings will result in conviction. *Subal Chandra Namadas v. Under the Cr. P. A resident of Ghaziabad in the District of Meerut sent nine entries addressed to the Illustrated Weekly of India. Commonsense Cross Word, Bombay, with a postal order for Rs. 6 from the Post Office of Muzaffarnagar. The case of the complainant (i. e., the competitor) was that the free-entry coupon No. 2 sent by the complainant tallied exactly with correct solution published by the accused but the prize of Rs. 25,000 payable to him was never paid. It was further alleged that the complainant sent in scrutiny claim for the re-examination of the solutions sent by him and also Rs. 5 as demanded by the accused. It was stated in the complaint that the accused did not send any reply to the inquiries made by the complainant. On these facts it was alleged that the accused had criminally misappropriated the sum of Rs. 6 sent by postal order as entry fee and the sum of Rs. 5 sent by M. O. as scrutiny fee and thereby committed an offence under S. 403, Penal Code. The complaint was filed in the Court of a Magistrate of the Second Class at Muzaffarnagar: Held, that even if it was assumed that the postal orders were received by the accused, the postal orders continued to be the property of the Illustrated Weekly of India. The delivery of the same to the accused was as an agent of the Illustrated Weekly of India. That being so, it could not be suggested that the accused received the letter containing the postal orders at Muzaffarnagar. The post office was the agent of the addressee and not of the accused. It might be, that the accused converted the postal orders to his own use, but the conversion and misappropriation was effected at Bombay and not at Muzaffarnagar. There was yet another reason why the Magistrate at Muzaffarnagar had no territorial jurisdiction. The complainant sent the postal orders to the Illustrated Weekly to be allowed to enter the competition. It followed that the intention of the complainant was that the money should be appropriated by the addressee. If the accused dishonestly and fraudulently misappropriated the money which was the property of the Illustrated Weekly of India, he deprived the addressee of the money and not the complainant. Whatever view might be taken, there could not be the least doubt that according to the allegations of the complainant, the misappropriation took place at Bombay and not at Muzaffarnagar. Hence the Magistrate at Muzaffarnagar had no territorial jurisdiction to try the case. G. A. St. George v. Uma Dutt Sharma.

An order of discharge does not operate as an acquittal and leaves the matter at large for all purposes of judicial inquiry. There is jurisdiction still vested in all Magistrates including the one who made the previous inquiry, just as before, but all Magistrates, and especially the one who formerly discharged the accused, are bound to exercise due discretion to take that discharge into account in dealing with the case, and it is the duty of the complainant to inform the Magistrate before whom the case comes up on the second occasion that he had previously filed a similar complaint which has been dismissed. In re : Mahadev Laxman Satardekar.

The decision whether there is sufficient ground for dismissing a complaint under S. 203 must be reached by the exercise of discretion based on judicial considerations. That the Magistrate considered the probable result of proceedings to be undesirable or the motives and conduct of the complainant to be discreditable are not relevant considerations. In the absence of any finding that the complaint is false or unsustainable on the evidence likely to be available, the passing of an order of dismissal would constitute an irregularity with which the High Court has, under S. 15 of the Charter Act, jurisdiction to deal. *Gangu Reddi v. ———Ss. 203, 403, 437—Fresh complaint—Discharge of accused—Prosecution on fresh complaint, legality of—Duty of Magistrate to make preliminary inquiry—Notice to accused, whether necessary.

An order dismissing a complaint or discharging an accused person does not operate as an acquittal under S. 403, and does not bar the taking cognizance of a fresh complaint of the same offence even though the order of dismissal or discharge has not been set aside in revision by a competent authority. Although there is no legal bar to the institution of fresh criminal proceedings against an accused person who has been discharged for the same offence as that with regard to which he has been discharged, the Courts should be chary in taking cognizance of complaints in such cases. In dealing with a complaint in such circumstances, the Magistrate is bound to proceed in the manner laid down in S. 200 seqq., that is, after examining the complainant, and if necessary, after a preliminary enquiry or local investigation, to decide whether there is sufficient ground for proceeding. In coming to this decision, he is bound to exercise a proper discretion, and a discretion improperly exercised would be a ground for interference by a Court of Revision.

The Magistrate is not, however, bound to issue notice to the accused before taking cognizance of the case. Dhana Reddy v. Emperor.

Mr. W. ordered a Police inquiry to be made, and on the receipt of the Police report, he dismissed the complaint under S. 203 of the Cr. P. C. A complaint of offences falling under Ss. 417—427 and 477, Penal Code, was made in the Court of a Deputy Magistrate. Notice of such complaint was issued to the persons mentioned in it, but no process compelling their attendance. The Deputy Magistrate took action under S. 202, Cr. P. The District Magistrate directed a further inquiry into the matters mentioned in the complaint, but without issuing notice to show cause : Held, that under the circumstances of the case and as the inquiry had practically been completed the order of the District Magistrate should not be set aside for want of notice. *Emperor v. A complaint was made to a Deputy Magistrate, who after considering a Police report on the matter, ordered : "Enter mistake of law." The complainant put in another complaint before the District Magistrate who sent the complaint to the Deputy Magistrate for judicial inquiry and report, and after considering his report, directed that the case should be entered as false. The complainant then applied to the Sessions Judge who ordered a further inquiry under S. 437 : Held, that the Deputy Magistrate's order must be regarded as an order dismissing the complaint. Therefore, the District Magistrate in directing a further inquiry acted under S. 435, and the Sessions Judge was not competent to direct

The Sessions Judge without issuing any notice on the accused directed the issue of summons straightaway on them under Ss. 420-120-B and ordered the same to be heard by other Magistrate : Held, that the form of the Judge's order was not correct. He should have left it to the Magistrate to select the particular form of enquiry instead of directing him categorically to issue a summons against the accused. But if the Magistrate, in the exercise of his own direction chose to issue a summons immediately instead of wasting time over a possibly useless enquiry, he was quite at liberty to do so. *Annakali Debi v. The 'Statesman,' an English daily of Calcutta, published an article libelling Hindu widows as a class and the Magistrate refused to issue process for defamation against the editor and printer of that newspaper on the ground that the class defamed was too wide to hurt any one : Held, that the Court was wrong in dismissing the complaint without giving the complainant an opportunity to substantiate the charge by production of evidence. *Mahim Chandra Roy v. —S. 203, 204—Procedure—Dismissal of complaint—Granting of summary A, B or C is mere administrative matter—On complaint Magistrate taking cognizance of offence—Procedure to be followed.

Dismissal of a complaint under S. 203 by an order granting a 'C' summary is not a proper dismissal of the complaint under S. 203 at all. The granting of a summary A, B or C is a mere administrative matter, while the dismissal of the complaint requires a judicial order under S. 203. Ordinarily when a Magistrate takes cognizance of an offence on a complaint, he should examine the complainant on oath and reduce the substance of his examination to writing, and if he wishes to postpone the issue of process, he acts in accordance with S. 202, and then if after inquiry he wishes to dismiss the complaint, he acts under S. 203. But that section contemplates that he should exercise his own independent judgment, and if he does not wish to postpone the issue of process, then he acts under S. 204 and the

A Magistrate examined the complainant, only one out of the several prosecution witnesses, recorded the statement of the accused and then dismissed the complaint awarding compensation to the accused : Held, (1) that the procedure of the Magistrate was illegal inasmuch as after having heard evidence for the prosecution, he could not pass an order dismissing the complaint though he could have made an order of discharge ; (2) that the entire evidence for the prosecution should have been received, unless for some very strong reason the Magistrate considered that evidence unnecessary. *Gokul Chand v. The complainant, whose brother had been murdered, lodged an information before the Police against the accused. The Magistrate, without examining either the complainant or any of the witnesses he wished to produce in support of his complaint, came to the conclusion that the case was one in which no Jury would convict the person complained against and refused to summon the accused : Held, that the Magistrate should not have disposed of a case of so serious a nature without examining the complainant or any of his witnesses. *Fazlur Rahman v. Its powers of interference exist by virtue of S. 15 of the Charter Act, which gives it a limited jurisdiction. It can exercise such powers only in cases of non-exercise or illegal exercise of jurisdiction and cannot set aside an order of discharge made by Presidency Magistrates merely on a consideration of the evidence in the case. *Kedar Nath Sanyal v. An accused person has no locus standi in an inquiry under Chap. XVI. The principle is equally applicable when the order in such an inquiry is under revision either in the High Court or the Sessions Court. On a revision petition against the dismissal of a complaint under S. 203, notice should not be issued to the accused. Where the Revision Court in such a case orders further inquiry, such inquiry must be regarded as being one under Chap. XVI and not Chap. XVII until the Magistrate is satisfied that a notice should go to the accused under S. 204. In re : T. S. Rambadra Odayar. 29 Cr. L. J. 1059 : 112 I. C. 563 : A. I. R. 1928 Mad. 1198.

The proper course for him was to send notice to the complainant requiring him to proceed with the case and then dispose of the case according to law. Held, further, that the District Magistrate had no jurisdiction under S. 437, Cr. —S. 208—Commitment to High Court—Duty of Magistrate.

In a case triable exclusively by the High Court, it is the duty of a Magistrate to commit the accused, if he is satisfied that there are credible witnesses to the facts, which, if believed by a Jury, would justify the conviction of the accused of the offences complained of. If he proceeds to weigh the evidence to accept some statements, to reject others and to deal with probabilities, or draws inferences as to knowledge or intention, he is in reality dealing with the question of the guilt or innocence of the accused and is usurping the function of the trial Court. The existence of a possible ground of defence is not a sufficient reason for a Magistrate to refuse to commit a person for trial against whom a prima facie case is made out. National Bank of India, Ltd. v. Kothandaram Chetti.

The petitioner was being tried before a Magistrate. After the witnesses for the prosecution had been examined, the petitioner's pleader pointed out to the Magistrate the propriety of committing the case for trial to the Court of Session. Yielding to that suggestion, the Magistrate framed certain charges, one of which was under S. 467 of the I. P. C., and directed that the case should be tried by the Court of Session. The petitioner then raised the point that the charge under S. 467 could not proceed for want of sanction under S. 195 of the Cr. P. C. The Magistrate then and there amended the charges and intimated his intention to try the case himself instead of committing it to the Court of Sessions. The petitioner's pleader thereupon objected that the Magistrate, having once framed charges and directed the case to be tried by the Court of Sessions could not thereafter amend the charges and proceed with the case: Held, that the mere framing of a charge against the accused, as required by S. 210 of Cr. P. C., is distinct from, and does not amount to, an order of commitment which has to be made under S. 213. Emperor v. Venkatesh Sadashiv. 11 Cr. L. J. 486 (b):

The High Court has power to revise an order of discharge whenever the order is manifestly wrong. As a rule, it does not interfere with the order of Criminal Court in revision except on the ground of an error of law or a serious irregularity in procedure which is likely to have affected the conclusion of the lower Court, but this is only a rule of practice based on the undesirability of interference by this Court merely on the ground of misappreciation of evidence. So far as the provisions of the statute are concerned, the High Court has plenary powers of interference and would not hesitate to exercise them, wherever the ends of justice require it, whether the error of the inferior Court be on a question of law or not. *National Bank of India, Ltd. v. —S. 208—Scope—Committal, purpose of —Magistrate's refusal to call evidence on behalf of accused.

The purpose of committal proceedings is not merely to place on record the case for the prosecution, but to commit to the Court of Sessions for trial, an offence which, after having heard the evidence for the prosecution and for the defence, the learned Magistrate thinks has been committed. But while it is intended that the prosecution should be allowed to adduce all material evidence in support of the prosecution case, so it is intended, to be fair, that the accused shall also be entitled to adduce all material evidence in their defence. It is true that under S. 208 (3), a Magistrate can, for reasons to be recorded, refuse to issue process to compel the attendance of any witness. But it does not mean that the Magistrate shall refuse the application of the accused to call witnesses because these witnesses can be called thereafter in the Court of Sessions. A committal to the Court of Sessions is a very serious matter indeed for an accused person and he is to be given every reasonable opportunity to show that there is no ground to commit him to the Court of Session because of the evidence he has adduced in his defence. Jashammal J. Gulrajani v. Emperor.

It is true that a Criminal Court has no power given to it by the Code to review and modify an order which it has once passed, but then it must have been an order such as is contemplated by the Code. If the charge, which made the case triable exclusively by the Court of Session, could not lie for want of sanction, the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to frame it, the framing of the charge was ultra vires, and the Magistrate had nothing to alter but was bound to proceed with the trial according to law. *Emperor v. There are cases which provide debatable ground, where the evidence is conflicting and lays itself open to suspicion but where on the other hand it may be true and may commend itself to certain tribunals. In an inquiry into a case triable by the Court of Session it is open to the Magistrate to form his opinion, with regard to the credibility of the witnesses called before him. It is not, however, his duty to closely criticise their evidence. If a prima facie case is made out, he should leave it to the Jury at the Sessions to form their own view as to the credibility of the evidence. But if after hearing the evidence he is satisfied that it is not trustworthy and that a conviction will not result, he is entitled to record his finding and to discharge the accused. *Tarapada Biswas v. —S. 209—Duty of Magistrate—Case triable by Sessions Court—Procedure.

Per Sulaiman, J.—The policy of the Legislature is that serious offences should be tried by Sessions Judges who are ordinarily more experienced than Magistrates. They are the proper Courts for pronouncing an opinion as to the guilt or innocence of accused persons in cases triable exclusively by the Sessions Court. Where, however, the evidence is wholly untrustworthy and the Magistrate is satisfied that it cannot lead to a conviction, he would be perfectly justified in discharging the accused even though he has already framed his charge. He should not, however, try to weigh the probabilities of the case and then after balancing the evidence on both sides, decide whether the guilt of the accused has or has not been conclusively proved. Akbar Ali v. Raja Bahadur.

The Committing Magistrate is bound to weigh the evidence of the witnesses who appear before him. If he does not, his proceedings are farcical. He should not, of course, require the same high standard of proof for the prosecution which he would require in cases which he can himself finally dispose of. If there merely exists in his mind a reasonable doubt as to the truth or otherwise of the evidence before him, he should commit the accused for trial and leave the Sessions Court to appreciate the evidence for itself. But this is not to say that he is precluded from finding that the prosecution case is false. If that is the only conclusion to which the evidence lead him, he would be failing in his manifest duty if he did not record his finding and discharge the accused. In re : Endapalle Ella Reddi.

—S. 209—Duty of Magistrate—Inquiry into case triable by Court of Session.

It is the duty of a Magistrate inquiring into a case triable by the Court of Session, if the evidence is prima facie adequate, to commit the case for trial and leave the ultimate judicial decision to the trial Court; but if he has reason to think and is prepared to state for judicial reasons, in the exercise of his discretion in his committal order, that there is a possibility of an alternative view to that which is set out in the charge originally made, he can always commit the accused for trial on two or more alternative charges. What he cannot do is to shut the door finally to the possibility of a trial upon evidence which prima facie is capable of interpretation to support graver charge. Where the evidence is conflicting and lays itself open to suspicion, but where on the other hand it may be true, and may commend itself to certain tribunals, the Magistrate, even though he may have reason to doubt whether if he were trying the case, he would convict, has no right to substitute his judgment for the final judgment of the Court indicated by law for the trial and to arrive at final decision dismissing the case in the way in which he would do if he were the trial Court. If the evidence is balanced, however unevenly in his opinion, then it is a matter which is to be tried, and it

If the inquiring Magistrate on the evidence before him comes to the conclusion that the charge is groundless, then he should discharge and not commit for trial. For a charge being groundless, it is not necessary that there should be no evidence at all of the charge. That will be a case of there being no evidence of the charge at all and not a case of the charge being groundless. What the inquiring Magistrate has got to try and determine is not whether the case has been made out but only whether there is a case for trial. There is always a case for trial when the evidence is of such a nature that the guilt of the accused can be held to be proved or disproved only as the result of valuing and weighing of the evidence. In re : Mania Manikha Padayachi.

If a Magistrate hearing a charge triable by the Court of Session comes to the conclusion that the evidence before him is totally untrustworthy and that there is no reasonable possibility of the case resulting in a conviction, he is entitled, and it is, indeed, his duty, to discharge the accused under S. 209. The same result follows if he comes to a similar conclusion after framing a charge and hearing witnesses for the defence under S. 213 (2). This discretion must, however, be carefully exercised, and wherever there is a possibility that different Courts might take different views of the evidence, the Magistrate, even though he may himself not think the evidence sufficient for a conviction, should leave it to the Sessions Court to pronounce finally upon the matter. *Akbar Ali v. Certain persons were accused of having formed an unlawful assembly with the common object of beating some persons, and in prosecution of that common object, having committed murder or culpable homicide not amounting to murder. The S. 30-Magistrate before whom the enquiry took place, charged them under S. 304, Part II-149 and 325-149, Penal Code. After a careful enquiry he came to the conclusion that there was no intention to cause death and convicted the accused under Ss. 325-149. On the complainant's application under S. 437, Cr. P. C., the Sessions Judge directed the accused to be tried under S. 302, holding that the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to try the accused. He held that the trial was without jurisdiction and ordered that the accused be committed for trial to the Sessions Court : Held, that under S. 209, the Magistrate had jurisdiction to decide whether the offence was triable by the Sessions Court or was triable by himself. There was nothing to show that the trial Magistrate snatched at any jurisdiction or perversely held that the offence was one triable by himself in order to minimize ————S. 211—Defence of evidence—Duty of Sessions Court to enforce attendance of accused's witnesses.

An accused, who has complied with the requirements of S. 211, Cr. P. C., and has put in at once his list of defence witnesses, is entitled as of right to have the attendance of those witnesses at the Sessions trial enforced in the event of their ignoring, or failing to comply with the summons. When processes have been issued by the Court, it is the duty of the Court to enforce them. Kali Bilash Hazra v. Emperor.

————S. 211—Defence evidence—Failure of accused to give list of witnesses—Consequent absence of defence witnesses—Conviction—Prejudice.

Where an accused person after being charged in the Committing Magistrate's Court stated that a list of defence witnesses would be filed and filed no list though a period of more than one month elapsed between the commitment and the commencement of his trial in the Sessions Court and there was no kind of application in this respect throughout the whole record, nor was there anything to show that he ever made a verbal representation to the Sessions Judge ; while on the contrary, on being questioned by the Sessions Judge personally as to if he had to produce any defence, he said "no" and in consequence, no defence witnesses were summoned in the Sessions Court : Held, that there could be only one explanation of it that the accused had no witnesses to produce and that no prejudice had occurred to the accused by action of the Courts below representing his defence. Abdul Wahab v. Emperor.

———S. 211—Defence evidence—List of defence witnesses filed at late stage—Absence of witness—Adjournment to.

Where an accused person does not file a list of witnesses under S. 211, Cr. P. C., he is not as of right entitled to an adjournment of the trial by reason of the fact that one of the witnesses summoned at his request at a late stage has not turned up. Nazir Singh v. Emperor.

It is not desirable that the presentation of the list of defence witnesses should be postponed till the last minute when the Code contemplates that it should be done at the time when the charge is framed. The Magistrate departs from the order of procedure in S. 210 and the following sections where he simultaneously frames the charge and passes an order of commitment. Musabru v. Emperor.

In a case where the list presented to the Sessions Judge was not a list of witnesses in addition to the number already summoned but was the first list which had been presented to any officer, it is desirable to summon at least some of the witnesses regarding the effect of whose testimony some explanation could be given. *Musabru v. There is a departure from the procedure contemplated by the Code when accused present their list of witnesses not to the Magistrate under S. 211 (2), Cr. P. Some of them, however, failed to attend and, when all the defence witnesses who had attended had been examined and the case was ready for hearing arguments, the accused made an application to enforce attendance of the absent witnesses, but the Sessions Judge refused the application on the sole ground that it should have been made earlier: Held, that as the refusal of the application was not based on the ground that the Judge was satisfied that the evidence of the witnesses would be immaterial, his refusal had vitiated the trial. *Foijuddi v. ———S. 215—Commitment to the Sessions—Evidence insufficient to be left to a jury—Insufficiency of evidence, a point of law or fact—Justification of High Court to quash commitment.

The petitioner, who was plaintiff in five suits, was present in Court at the trial of the suits. His Patwari (a servant), who appeared for him as a witness, gave false evidence and produced a number of documents which were forgeries. In commitment of the petitioner to the Sessions for offences under Ss. 193, 196, 471, 114, I. P. C., the only evidence against him was :—(1) That a servant (Patwari) in his employ gave false evidence and produced forged documents ; (2) That he was present actively prosecuting his suits ; (3) That the evidence of the Patwari, if believed, would have supported his case ; (4) That he sometimes made collections and had tested Jamabandis : Held, that this just stops short of a case which would properly be left to a jury. It is a case of suspicion—possibly strong suspicion—but in the absence of any evidence that petitioner had seen, or knew of the contents of the documents produced by the Patwari, there is no case for him to answer. The commitment was accordingly quashed on the ground that prima facie there was no case against that petitioner. The test which should be applied to decide whether a committal ought or ought not to be made on the facts is this—assuming that the whole of the evidence telling against the accused is true, is there a case which a Judge at a trial could leave to a jury? If the evidence is such that a judge would have been bound to rule that there was no evidence on which a jury could convict, then a committal ought not to be made. If there was any evidence which called for an answer—however great the preponderance in favour of the prisoner might be—then the committal was proper. Per Henderson, J.—The object of a preliminary enquiry in a criminal case is to ascertain whether there is any real case against the accused before a commitment is made and if all that can be said is that there is a mere scintilla of evidence then there should be no commitment. Per Henderson and Girdl, JJ.—A Sessions Judge has no power to order a stay of proceedings before a Magistrate. All he can do under S. 435, Cr. P. C., is to call for the record of any proceeding before a Magistrate. Shcobur Ram v. Emperor.

In cases in which there is no evidence to warrant a commitment and in cases in which commitment is made on no legal evidence at all, action may be taken under S. 215, Cr. P. C. High Court, however, will not quash commitments where there is a prima facie case against the persons who have been committed to take their trial to a Court of Session. In such cases, no legal question arises and so the Court has no power to quash the commitment. —Ss. 215, 30—Point of Law—Case triable by Sessions—S. 30 Magistrate present in the district—No reasons for commitment given—Commitment, legality of—Proper procedure.

When a case is triable by the Sessions Court, the mere fact that the Committing Magistrate did not give his reasons for committing the case when there was a S. 30 Magistrate in the District, cannot make the commitment illegal. The proper course for the Sessions Judge would be to try the case and if he ultimately found that the case should not have been committed, he should bring the matter to the notice of the District Magistrate. *Indoo v. Where an alteration is made in a charge by a Magistrate at a late stage of the trial and the accused is committed to the Sessions without being given an opportunity of re-examining the witnesses for the prosecution and producing his defence in regard to the alteration in the charge, the procedure adopted is illegal and is likely to prejudice the accused in his trial before the Court of Session, and the commitment is, therefore,

Where there has been a commitment for the trial of charges, some of which are triable by a Sessions Court with a Jury and others triable by a Magistrate, the fact that during the trial, the charges which were triable by the Sessions Court are withdrawn is not a ground for setting aside the order of commitment and taking away the accused's right to a trial by Jury without his consent. *Emperor v. Cr. P. CODE (1898), S. 215

Under S. 215, Cr. P. C., the commitment can only be quashed on a point of law. Offences which are triable by both a Magistrate and a Sessions Court, should ordinarily be tried by the Magistrate though of course if he considers that the maximum sentence which he can inflict is insufficient, he has the power to commit to Sessions, but this is an exception to the general rule, that if the Magistrate can try, he should do so. In such a case, the Magistrate must exercise his discretion after due consideration and state the reasons why he commits to a Court of Sessions. Where the Magistrate has given no reason why he has committed the accused, the whole commitment should be quashed. Sheomangal Pandey v. Emperor.

The real test in deciding whether an order of commitment should be quashed or not is to see whether there is evidence which could fairly be acted upon, whether, in other words, a Judge at a trial held with Jurymen could say that there was evidence which could go before a Jury. Evidence of an accomplice can be acted upon without corroboration in a proper case and, therefore, the mere fact that the only evidence is that of an accomplice is no ground for quashing an order of commitment. *Bal Chand v. But the commitment is valid in spite of the want of territorial jurisdiction unless a failure of justice has in fact been caused by such commitment. A commitment order cannot be quashed merely on the ground that the evidence was doubtful. The trial took under Ss. 348 and 380, Penal Code, and the accused were committed to the Court of the Assistant Sessions Judge. The 1st accused was charged with having wrongfully confined some persons, and tortured them in a certain place. The 2nd and 3rd accused were charged with wrongful restraint and torture of a different set of persons in another place. Accused Nos. 1, 3, 4 and 5 were charged with having together restrained and tortured certain other persons in a different place. The occurrences took place on different dates. The Assistant Sessions Judge framed a single charge containing a single Count against all to the effect that they had wrongfully confined different persons for the purpose of extorting a confession. The accused were convicted under Ss. 348 and 388, Penal Code. In the course of the trial, the statements of witnesses recorded by the Police Superintendent during his investigation were used as corroborative of their evidence at the Sessions trial: Held, per curiam, that the statements recorded by the Police Superintendent were wrongly admitted in evidence and that a re-trial of the accused was necessary. Per Sadasiva Aiyar, J. (Napier, J. dissenting)—That the joint trial of all the accused was illegal, as the part played by the accused was distinct. The wrongful restraint was of different persons at different places by accused acting independently of the others, but that the charge, as framed, though objectionable, was at the most an irregularity that did not vitiate the trial. Per Napier, J.—That the trial was not bad for misjoinder, as the acts of the accused were founded on a common purpose or design and were linked together as to form one and the same transaction; but that the charge framed was distinct violation of Ss. 221 and 222 of the Cr. P. C., so as to altogether vitiate the trial. Kumaramathu Pillai v. Emperor.

It is not necessary in charge of a rioting to set out the allegation that there were five or more persons actuated by a common object. A charge-sheet should never contain more than what is necessary for the prosecution to prove. In a case under S. 396, Penal Code, it is not necessary for the prosecution to prove that the murder was committed jointly by all the accused. It is enough if any one of the accused who are jointly concerned in the committing of the dacoity commits murder in the commission of the dacoity. It is not, therefore, necessary for a charge under this section to state that the murder was committed by all the accused persons jointly. A Sessions Judge when he receives an indictment, should compare the charge-sheet with the language of the section under which the charge has been drawn up and, when necessary, amend the charge-sheet, using so far as possible the words of the section. *Bhulan v. The point to be seen in each individual case is whether the accused person was prejudiced thereby. Where the Judge has carefully explained the difference between abduction and kidnapping and the jury fully understood the position and have acquitted the accused of the charge of kidnapping under S. 366, Penal Code, but convicted them of abduction under S. 366 of the Code, in other words, the jurymen were not satisfied that the girl was 16 or under 16 years, the charge cannot be said to have prejudiced the accused. *Ebadi Khan v. The charge-sheet corresponds to the English indictment and it is very much more than a mere form. In stating the object of a conspiracy, the same certainty is not required as in indictment for the offence conspired to be committed. breach of trust—Same parcel of money—More than one accused—Charges how to be framed—Abetment.

In S. 222, Cr. P. If two persons are responsible for a misappropriation, the charges against them must be of misappropriation in one case and of abetment in the other. It is, of course, open to the Court to frame charges in the alternative: firstly, that A. misappropriated the money, B. being the abettor; or, secondly, B. misappropriated and A. was the abettor. *Girwar Narain v. ———Ss. 222 (2), 234—Form of charge—Criminal misappropriation—Misappropriation of more than three sums on different dates within two months—Single charge and separate sentences, legality of.

The accused was charged with having embezzled four sums of money on or about January 9, February 5 and February 13, 1929. Only one charge was framed in which all the four sums of money said to have been embezzled and the dates of the alleged embezzlements were specified. The trial Magistrate found the accused guilty of having embezzled the sums of money specified on the three dates, namely, January 9, February 5 and February 13, and sentenced him to rigorous imprisonment for the period of two years on each of the three counts, the sentences to run concurrently. The accused in appeal contended that he had, in effect, been tried on four charges of embezzlement and as S. 234, Cr. P. C., permits an accused person to be tried at one trial for not more than three offences of the same nature committed within twelve months, the trial was bad in law: Held, (i) that inasmuch as there was one charge setting out all the items embezzled and the dates of embezzlement and the time included between the first and the last of such dates was less than twelve months, the charge was correctly drawn up in accordance with the provisions of S. 222, Sub-s. (2) and the charge must be deemed to have been a charge of one offence within the meaning of S. 234; (ii) that the Magistrate was not correct in sentencing the accused separately on each of the three counts. He should have passed only one sentence for the one offence with which the accused was charged but the irregularity was of no practical importance as the sentences were to run concurrently. *Emperor v. S. 222, Cr. P. C. clearly admits of the trial of any number of acts of breach of trust committed within the year as amounting only to one offence. It does not require any particular formulation of the accusation, but only enacts that it is sufficient to show the aggregate offence without specifying the details. It dispenses with the necessity of amplification : it does not prohibit enumeration of the particular items in the charge. Emperor v. Datto Hanmant.

The accused was jointly tried of offences falling under six different charges, viz : (1) Criminal breach of trust of a sum during the period 17th September 1914, to 25th March, 1915 ; (2) Criminal breach of trust of a sum during the period 26th March, 1915, to 31st March, 1916 ; (3) Criminal breach of trust of a sum during the period 1st April to 31st May, 1916 ; (4) Criminal breach of trust of a sum during the period 1st June, 1916, to 9th October, 1916 ; (5) Preparation of a false balance sheet of the Lahore Electric Supply Company for the year ending 31st March, 1915 ; (6) Preparation of a false balance sheet for the year ending 31st March, 1915 ; and was acquitted. Government preferred an appeal to the Chief Court against the acquittal : Held, (1) that charges (1) and (5) could have been tried together, because the preparation of the false balance sheet for the year ending 31st March, 1915, was effected to conceal the criminal breach of trust which had been committed during the period ending 25th March, 1915 ; (2) that similarly charges (2) and (6) could have been tried together and charges (4) and (5) could also have been tried together in one trial, as they related to two offences of the same kind committed within the space of 12 months ; (3) but that the trial of all six charges in one trial being contrary to S. 234, Cr. P. C. was quite illegal ; (4) that charge (2) contravened S. 222, Cr. P. C., and the trial of that charge was in itself quite illegal ; (5) that the Court before the commencement of the trial should have recorded an order to the effect that it was trying such and such charge or charges and should have proceeded to take all the evidence relating thereto, the trials should have been distinct and the accused should have been apprised as to which charges were being tried in each trial and the opinions of the Assessors should have been recorded separately in each ; (6) that it would not be fair to the accused, who had been acquitted, to order a re-trial simply because the trial was illegal on account of misjoinder of charges, unless the Court was satisfied that the order of acquittal was obviously erroneous or was not one which should be maintained owing to the trial Court having omitted to consider material evidence or for some other sufficient reason ; (7) that the onus was on the prosecution to prove affirmatively that the accused received any sums beyond those entered by him as having been received ; (8) that it could not on the evidence be said for certain that the accused was in charge of all the money received by the Company ; (9) that in view of all these facts it was not one of those exceptional cases where, supposing the trial had been legal, the Chief Court would reverse the order and convict the accused and that, therefore, a re-trial should not be ordered. *Emperor v. The assumption in case of an offence of criminal breach of trust, that, because under the provisions of S. 222 (2), Cr. P. C., the specification of a gross sum in respect of which an offence is alleged to have been committed and the dates between which it is committed is permissible, it must follow that only one offence has arisen out of the different misappropriations, and that it must be regarded as one transaction, is not warranted by the provisions of the section. That section provides that the charge so framed “shall be deemed to be” a charge of one offence within the meaning of S. 234, and not that it is one offence. Although several items of defalcations may be lumped together so as to obviate the difficulty arising under the provisions of the Code, they would not necessarily constitute one transaction for obvious reasons. Each act may retain its homogeneity and may be completely separated from the rest, unless under special circumstances they could be entwined in one transaction. *Ramchandra Rango Sorokar v. Where, therefore, a person was tried and convicted for misappropriating certain sums of money during a certain period and was again put on trial in respect of certain other sums of money alleged to have been misappropriated during the same period: Held, that the charge in the previous case should be taken to include all the items misappropriated by the accused in the course of the same transaction during that period and that the subsequent trial was barred by S. 403 of the Code. In re : Appadurai Ayyar.

—Ss. 223, 225—Charge of cheating, contents of.

An accused person is entitled to know with certainty and accuracy the exact value of the accusation brought against him. In a case of cheating, the charge must set out the manner in which the offence was committed. Whether the words of the charge are reasonably sufficient to give the accused notice of the accusation which he has got to meet depends upon the circumstances of each particular case. The omission to set out the manner of the cheating is regarded as material or not according as the accused has or has not in fact been misled by the omission and the omission has or has not occasioned a failure of justice.

Cr. P. CODE (1898), S. 223

In a case under S. 420, Penal Code, the manner of the cheating was set out in the charge as follows: "By deceiving with false representations and promises as well as by conduct:" Held, the expression used in the charge was too vague and indefinite to give the accused proper notice of the manner of the deception and was so dangerously wide as to include almost anything, and that a conviction based on such a charge could not be sustained. *Kedar Nath Chakravarti v. ———S. 223—Contents of charge—Penal Code, S. 149—Charge of offence read with S. 149—Section, whether ought to be named in charge—Prejudice to accused.

S. 149, Penal Code, is not a section which in itself creates an offence and a Court trying an accused person for an offence which is an offence constructively by force of S. 149, ought, under S. 223, Cr. P. C., to state that fact and name that section in the charge. Failure to do so renders the charge defective and erroneous, and a conviction for such an offence will not be sustained where S. 149, was not mentioned in the charge. Where an accused person is charged with an offence by virtue of S. 149, Penal Code, it is essential that he should have notice that the charge against him is not that he has himself physically taken part in the offence, but that he was a member of an unlawful assembly, which in the prosecution of its common object, committed that offence, or that, being a member of such an assembly, he knew that such offence was likely to be committed by it in the prosecution of its common object. It is, therefore, necessary that in such a case S. 149 should be expressly mentioned in the charge. In such a case as the above, the inclusion of S. 149, Penal Code, in the charge also insures that the Court has given and will give its mind to the question of the guilt of the accused from the point of view of that section. In re: Thaikottathil Kunhaen. 25 Cr. ———S. 223, 225, 537—Defective charge—Trial de novo, when justified—Re-trial from what stage to be ordered.

S. 537, Cr. P. C. cures any omission in a charge there might be of the particulars required by S. 223 of the Code. When no charge has been framed or a defective one has been framed, there is no justification for ordering a trial de novo but the trial should proceed from the stage at which the illegality occurred. S. 537 (a), Cr. P. C. does not apply to cases of the disregard or provision of the Code, but applies only to cases of failure to comply with some part of such a provision in the course of a general compliance with the whole. If a Court trying an accused person entirely fails to question him generally on the case after the witnesses for the prosecution have been examined and before he is called on for his defence, the trial from that point onwards, and not the entire trial, is improper or illegal and the error cannot be condoned under S. 537 but must be corrected in a fresh trial, beginning from the point at which the error was made. *Gangadhar v. The word "manner" in S. 223, Cr. P. An accused charged with being a member of an unlawful assembly with the common object of committing 'assault' can be convicted for being member of an unlawful assembly with the common object of 'voluntarily causing hurt' without altering the charge. The word 'assault' is used in such a case in the sense of violence to person, whether it can be assault, hurt or grievous hurt. But, if a charge is once altered, the Court is bound to recall any witnesses which the prosecution or the accused may desire to examine. The provisions of S. 231 Cr.P.C., are peremptory and the Court cannot,

Every summing-up must be regarded in the light of the conduct of the trial and the questions which have been raised by the Counsel for the prosecution and for the defence, respectively. The Magistrate, who tried the case, had framed a charge, with two heads, one bearing on each article, and each head mentioned that the accused was punishable under Ss. 124-A and 153-A for publishing the article. It was contended on behalf of the accused (1) that the receipt of his paper by Government servants in their capacity as such servants was no publication; (2) that each of the offences ought to have been charged separately; (3) that from the articles passages which offended against S. 124-A and those against S. 153-A ought to have been distinctly pointed out in separate charges; and (4) that the trial of four offences at one trial was illegal : Held, (1) that it is a sufficient publication if a newspaper containing a seditious article has been received by a Government servant; (2) that the accused had distinct notice of the charges he had to answer, and the informal mode, if any, in which the charges were drawn up was cured by S. 225, Cr. The accused was tried by the Court of Session under S. 460, Penal Code, but after the assessors had given their opinion to the effect that the accused was caught in the house of M in the act of committing burglary and struck him a blow from which he died, the Sessions Judge recorded an order to the effect that the accused should have been charged under S. 302, Penal Code, as well as under S. 460, and amending the charge under S. 227, Cr. P. C., convicted the accused under S. 302, Penal Code: Held, that the alteration of the charge by the Sessions Judge after the assessors had given their opinion was illegal: Held, further, that the accused was guilty of causing the death of M under S. 460, Indian Penal Code, but that the offence committed by him did not amount to murder. *Harbans v. Where upon the trial of an accused person upon specific charges in a Court of Session, it is found at the conclusion of the trial that the charges as framed disclose no offence against the accused, it is illegal and prejudicial to the accused to alter or amend the charges and to convict him thereon without affording him an opportunity of meeting the altered or amended charges. The fact that the accused cross-examined the prosecution witnesses to prove the unsustainability of the charges as originally framed, is no ground for holding that by substantially altering the charges the accused was not prejudiced. A Court of Session is not a Court of original jurisdiction, and though vested with large powers of amending and adding to charges, can only do so with reference to the immediate subject of the prosecution and committal, and not with regard to matter not covered by the indictment. *Muthu Goundan v. Ss. 34 and 149, Penal Code, create no distinct offences and are merely rules of evidence or of Common Law which fix liability upon joint wrong-doers. Therefore, where a charge is altered from one under S. 436 to one under S. 436 read with S. 149, the trial still remains a trial under S. 436. And where a trial under S. 436 is triable with the aid of the Jury, a trial under S. 436 read with S. 149 with the aid of assessors is without jurisdiction. It is open to a Sessions Judge to add an alternative charge but it is not a proper exercise of discretion to withdraw the charge which the Committing Magistrate thought to be proved and put the accused under a disadvantage by substituting another so that he might be deprived of the right of trial by Jury. *Ramsunder Isser v. Under S. 231, Cr. P. When a charge has been framed under Ss. 326, 149, Penal Code, a conviction under S. 326 is not necessarily bad but it depends on whether the accused has or has not been materially prejudiced by the form of the charge. The omission of S. 149 from a charge does not create an illegality by reason of S. 233, Cr. P. C. which provides that for every distinct offence of which any person is accused, there shall be a separate charge. Theethumalai Gounder v. Emperor. (F. B.) 25 Cr. L. J. 1297 : 82 I. Per Sharfuddin and Beachcroft, JJ. (Fletcher, J. dis.)—The joinder in one charge of two distinct offences of causing hurt to two distinct individuals is not an illegality which vitiates the trial but it is an irregularity which is cured by S. 537, Cr. P. C. The qualifying words "subject to the provisions, hereinbefore contained" in S. 537, do not refer to the entire Code that precedes that section but only to Ss. 529 to 536. Per Sharfuddin, J.—The first portion of S. 233 is not so imperative as to render a trial null and void if the direction enjoined therein is disobeyed. In other words, a disobedience of the first portion of S. 233 is not an illegality which vitiates a trial but is a mere irregularity curable by S. 537 of the Code. A charge is a first notice to the prisoner of the matter whereof he is accused and it must convey to him with sufficient clearness and certainty that which the prosecution intended to prove against him and of which he will have to clear himself. When two offences have been committed and either of them has no connection with the other, they are distinct offences. Although illustrations have no force of law, they go a great way to explain the intention of the Legislature. The object of S. 233 is two-fold : in the first place, to give an accused person notice of the charges which he has to meet; in the second, to see that he is not embarrassed by having to meet charges in no way connected with one another. Where the offences form part of the same transaction, the law allows them to be tried together; in such a case, the accused is not likely to be embarrassed or the Court confused. The first part of the section is designed to give the accused notice of the charges against him.

Cr. P. CODE (1898), S. 233

The object is that he shall not be convicted of an offence of which he has not been charged. This object is not frustrated, and the accused is not prejudiced, if the accusations against him are written in one sentence or on one sheet of paper, instead of in two sentences or on two sheets of paper. *Ram Subhag Singh v. For every distinct offence of which any person is accused, there should be a separate charge and every charge shall be tried separately. This is a broad rule and applies to all trials for offences under the Criminal Law. In S. 233 of the Cr. P. C., this rule is made subject to four exceptions. But a Court cannot and ought not to treat a case before it as an exception to the general and broad rule, unless it is satisfied that in the case before it, the charge should be brought within one of the four exceptions. A trial in contravention of S. 233, unless justified by the exception section, is not a mere irregularity but it is an illegality. The offence of murder and the offence of voluntarily causing hurt are not what are defined in S. 234 as offences of the "same kind." The provisions contained in the former part of Chapter XIX apply to all charges falling under S. 239, which is thus governed by Ss. 234 and 235. The charge-sheet is a very important document and the drawing of it a very important act in a criminal trial. Magistrates cannot exercise too much care when they proceed to frame a charge. Shanker v. Emperor.

Where an accused person is charged with rioting under S. 147, I. P. C. with the common object of causing hurt to the complainant, he cannot be convicted of causing hurt to another person. S. 233 of the Cr. P. C. is mandatory, and for every distinct offence, there should be a separate charge which should, except in certain cases specified, be tried separately. The words "merely on the ground that no charge was framed" in S. 535 of the Cr. P. ———S. 233—Joinder of charges.

S. 233, Cr. P. C. must be strictly followed, save and except where the law itself provides an exception. A joinder of three charges under S. 409, Penal Code, and three charges under S. 477-A is not covered by any of the exceptions provided in the subsequent sections of the Code. A series of alterations in accounts made to cover a defalcation might all be charged in one charge under the provisions of S. 477-A. It cannot be said that there are three distinct offences committed by an accused person merely by reason of the fact that he makes more than one false entry to cover one defalcation. But a series of false entries referring to three different defalcations, cannot be taken in the same trial, although three defalcations or a whole series of falsified accounts may be tried in one charge. Therefore the joinder of three charges under S. 409, Penal Code, and three charges under S. 477-A, is bad and fatal to the trial. Raman Behary Das v. Emperor. 16 Cr. L. J. 153 :

———Ss. 233, 234, 235—Joinder of charges—Procedure, compliance with—Necessity of following procedure relating to joinder of charges.

The necessity of following the procedure regarding joinder of charges laid down by the law is obviously dictated by reasons of practical expediency and justice, namely to simplify the enquiry from the point of view of the accused. Ramchandra Rango Sowkar v. Emperor. 40 Cr. L. J. 579 :

Ss. 233, 234, 235, 236, 237 and 239 of the Cr. P.C., referred to as exceptions in S. 233, are not mutually exclusive; otherwise the provisions of Ss. 236 or 237 can never be invoked to prevent a miscarriage of justice arising from a failure to make good all the details of a charge joined with two other charges under S. 234. The Legislature hardly intended that a joint trial of three offences under S. 234 should prevent the prosecution from establishing at the same trial the minor or alternative degrees of criminality involved in the same acts complained of. Ss. 235 and 236 may be resorted to in framing additional charges where the trial is, under S. 234, of three offences of the same kind committed within a year. In re : Bal Gangadhar Tilak.

Twenty-three persons obtained a loan from Government on a joint bond. Accused, who were asked by the Revenue Collector to collect the first instalment of the loan from the borrowers, made a misrepresentation to each borrower of the amount due by him and thus obtained a sum of money in excess of that really due by the borrowers: Held, that the misrepresentation in each case being the same, and the offences having all been committed at the same time and place, all in pursuance of the same conspiracy, they were all committed in the course of the same transaction and could be tried together. *Kailash Chandra Pal v. —Ss. 233, 235, 537—Joinder of charges—Police Officer preparing incorrect record consisting of several documents—Separate charge in respect of each document, whether necessary—Irregularity.

Accused, a Police Inspector, was charged in one trial with having prepared certain documents incorrectly in order to screen one H. and to save him from legal punishment. He was convicted of an offence under S. 218, I. P. C. The documents set forth in the charge were a rugqa addressed to the officer in charge of the Police Station, a first information report based upon the rugqa, seven Police diaries relating to the investigation held in the case and the final report to the Magistrate: Held, (1) that the various documents formed part of one continuous whole the same purpose, namely the saving of H. from legal punishment, and therefore, the offences having been committed in the same transaction, they could all be tried in the same trial; (2) that the documents in question together comprised the Police record of an investigation into a charge and that the accused being charged with having prepared an incorrect Police record, there was nothing defective in framing a single charge in respect of all the documents; (3) that even if it were held that the accused should have been charged with separate offences in regard to each document, the trial was not illegal merely because one charge was framed in regard to all the documents, the irregularity being covered by S. 537. *Emperor v. On these facts: Held, (1) that a joint charge under S. 366 of the Penal Code against both K and B was justified; (2) that a joint charge under S. 376 of the Penal Code against both of them in respect of the occurrence which took place at D was also justified; (3) that a joint charge against both of them of having committed rape upon the woman at D and in other places was both improper and embarrassing; (4) that if it was intended to prosecute B with regard to the offences that he was accused for having committed elsewhere, there should be separate charges with regard to those offences. *Keramat Mandal v. ———Ss. 233, 234—Misjoinder of charges—Falsification of accounts—Each entry, whether separate offence—Joinder of more than three charges at one trial—Illegality.

The joinder of more than three charges at a single trial is fatal to the trial. Each false entry which amounts to an act of falsification, constitutes a separate offence, although a number of false entries might be proved to cover one defalcation. Where under one of three charges against an accused person in the same trial, there were two acts of defalcation covered by two false entries and the only thing to connect them together was the fact that the goods were received the same day from the same depositor: Held, that this amounted to a joinder of really more than three charges in a single trial and was fatal to the trial and that the convictions were liable to be quashed. Chakrakodi Shama Shastri v. Emperor.

The fact that the servant of a ferry contractor, levied toll without the knowledge of his master, does not give rise to a presumption as to the latter's guilty connivance. Each individual levy of excess toll constitutes a separate offence, and Ss. 233 and 234, Cr. P. C. would apply. Emperor v. Arumukham Pillai.

An accused was charged under S. 381, Penal Code, with theft in respect of eight necklaces, which were in the possession of his employer. The Magistrate found that the accused had not committed theft but that he had committed criminal breach of trust in a series of transactions. The actual misappropriation with regard to one of the necklaces was found to have happened in February, 1922, and with regard to another in January, 1924: Held, that the offence in regard to the necklaces being one of criminal breach of trust, and the transaction in regard to each necklace being apparently a separate one, it was necessary to charge the accused separately with each offence, and that although it might technically be said that there was no misjoinder of charges as only one charge was drawn, the trial was vitiated in the same way as if there had been a misjoinder of charges. *Raman Lal v. Accused Nos. 2 and 3 were directors of a certain bank and accused No. 8 was its manager and accused No. 1 its legal adviser. Accused Nos. 1 to 7 were partners in a certain firm. The Articles of Association of the bank required that all advances to customers beyond Rs. 100 were to have the sanction of the director. Accused No. 8 advanced large amounts during the period 1928 to 1931 to the firm of which accused Nos. 1 to 7 were partners, without the sanction of the director and without taking any security from them. Thus on November 13, 1931, the firm was indebted to the bank to the extent of Rs. 32,008-7-0, and on that date, accused Nos. 1 to 7 executed an instalment bond for Rs. 30,000 in favour of the bank and the balance was carried over to the new account. The bond was placed on the record of the bank and the corresponding entries were made in the books of the bank. The bank instituted a suit against the firm to recover the amount due and obtained a decree. While this suit and an application for winding-up the bank were pending, criminal proceedings were started against the accused in respect of the different transactions and they were charged with offences under Ss. 408, 409, 193 and 477-A read with S. 109, I. P. C. The charge of criminal breach of trust was in respect of six items between November 23, 1930, and April 21, 1931: Held, (i) that having regard to the charge under S. 193, I. P. C., a complaint by the Civil Court was necessary to give jurisdiction to the Magistrate to inquire into that charge and the defect affected the entire proceedings before the Committing Magistrate and the trial Court and the whole proceedings were vitiated by the illegality committed; (ii) that the offence of fabrication of false evidence relating to items partly or wholly unconnected with the charge of criminal breach of trust was a distinct offence and the joinder of the two charges offended against the prohibition contained in S. 233, Cr. P. C., unless the case was brought within the exception to that section; (iii) that S. 234, Cr. P. C., did not apply, for the offences were not of the same kind, i. e. punishable with the same amount of punishment under the same section of the I. P. C. The different advances between 1928 and 1931, made from time to time upon different applications, though a series of similar acts, did not constitute one transaction within the meaning of the expression "the same transaction" in S. 235, Cr. P. C.; (iv) that the charge framed was seriously defective in that it had joined together the offences under S. 193, and S. 477-A of the I. P. C. contrary to the provisions of S. 235 (1), Cr. P. C. Ramchandra Rango Sorekar v. Emperor.

The accused was arraigned on three charges: (1) that on a certain date, he committed criminal breach of trust in respect of Rs. 500 entrusted to him by his employer; (2) that he, on the same day, falsified his employer's cash book by making an incorrect entry regarding the said Rs. 500, and committed an offence under S. 477-A, I. P. C., and (3) that on a subsequent day he again falsified his employer's cash book by showing the total on the credit side as less by Rs. 500 than he ought to have shown it, and so committed another offence under S. 477-A, I. P. C.; Held, that although there was a similarity as to the amount dealt with the second falsification alleged had nothing whatever to do with the alleged breach of trust in the first charge and the first falsification; that, therefore, there was no connection between the third charge on the one hand and the first and second on the other; that there was a misjoinder of charges and therefore, either the first or the third charge must go. *Nitya Gopal v. The accused were charged at one trial with the offences of conspiracy to murder, murder and arson, in that they were alleged to have set fire to a house, barred the doors, burnt most of the inmates and killed such as tried to escape. It appeared that there was really no foundation for the charges of murder and arson as regards most of the accused according to the facts alleged by the prosecution. The Jury, however, found all the accused guilty on all the charges; Held: that since a multitude of charges not having any proper foundation and obscuring the case which the accused had to meet were put forward, the accused were prejudiced in their defence and the Jury misled and confused, and that, therefore, the accused should be re-tried. Per Mukerji, J.—The provisions of S. 233 of the Cr. P. C. are mandatory. The provisions of Ss. 235 and 239, Cr. P. It lay upon the prosecution to establish the facts which would justify such a charge. The dishonest receipt or retention of each article constituted a separate offence, and the accused could only be tried for three of such offences committed within one year unless it were shown that the receipt or retention of all the articles formed one transaction.

The disregard of an express provision of law as to the mode of trial is not a mere irregularity which could be remedied by S. 537, Cr. P. C. S. 385, I. P. C., is not a minor offence with particulars common with an offence under S. 300. Both of these sections have got distinct and independent ingredients. An offence under S. 385 brings into the field an entirely different set of circumstances which have nothing whatsoever to do with an offence under S. 300. Where therefore an accused is committed to the Court of Session under S. 304, I. P. C., and is never charged under S. 385, I. P. In trial of two cross-cases of rioting, one case was taken up first, and some witnesses for the prosecution were examined. The other case was taken up on the next day, and certain witnesses for the prosecution in that case were examined. The order sheets showed that on certain days certain witnesses were examined in both the cases, while, on other days, witnesses in one or the other case were examined, and in some instances, some of the accused in one case were examined as witnesses for the prosecution in the other. The charges in the two cases were framed at an interval of four days, but the evidence was completed, and arguments were heard on one and the same day, and two days after both the cases were disposed of by separate judgments: Held, that the trial was not vitiated by reason of the procedure adopted by the Magistrate, nor were the accused in any way prejudiced thereby. ———S. 234—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), S. 120-B—Misjoinder of charges—Joint trial for conspiracy and several murders and other offences committed in pursuance thereof, legality of.

Five persons were charged with twenty-two others on eight charges. The main charge was one under S. 120-B, I. P. C., of criminal conspiracy. The other charges related to various incidents and offences committed in pursuance of that conspiracy including seven murders, two attempted murders, four of robbery, two of grievous hurt, and eleven of dacoity. The petitioners were found guilty of three murders specified in one of the charges and sentenced to death. The High Court upheld the conviction holding that there was no misjoinder. The petitioners applied for special leave to appeal to the Privy Council contending that there was misjoinder of charges and that the trial was consequently illegal. Their Lordships dismissed the petition. Mukand Singh v. Emperor. 29 Cr. L. J. 673 : 110 I. C. 225 : 8 Lah. 230 : 55 I. A. 45 : A. I. R. 1929 P. C. 215.

———S. 234—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), S. 411—Receiving or retaining stolen property—Several parcels, charge relating to—Procedure—Stolen property, whether can be restored to owner by anybody except Court.

Where no evidence, one way or the other, exists as to whether receipt of various parcels of stolen property by an accused person took place at the same or different dates, no presumption can be drawn or assumption made as against the accused either that the offence of retention by receiver constitutes one or more than one connected transaction. The prosecution cannot base its case or justify its procedure upon any presumption or assumption operating against an accused unless such presumption or assumption is grounded upon evidence. In answer to a charge under S. 411, I. P. C., relating to several parcels of property, an accused person may plead either that his retention of the various parcels of stolen goods was one transaction in which case he can only be tried once under S. 403, Cr. P. C.; or that such retention constituted a set of disconnected separate offences in which case he can, at one trial, be charged only in respect of three parcels, under S. 234, Cr. P. C. But he cannot plead both. If he contends that his retentions were one transaction, he can be charged at one trial with retention of the whole of the stolen property bunched and listed together; whereas if he pleads that the retentions were all distinct and separate offences, separate trials could be held in respect of each parcel of stolen property. The only safe course to adopt, in cases where no date of reception of stolen property is known or can be proved by the prosecution, is to frame a charge on the presumption that the property retention constituted one transaction. If property is found in the possession of an individual which is alleged to be stolen property, and if a charge embodying three parcels of such stolen property is preferred against the retainer and the retainer is convicted or acquitted, it by no means permits him to maintain possession of other property found in his possession which persons other than he claim as their own; and, although it may be that he cannot, in respect of that other property, be further criminally proceeded against, the rightful owners, have a civil claim for recovery which can be enforced in a simple manner. There is no warrant for handing over by any authority other than through the medium of a Court, property not included in the criminal proceedings to persons who alleged that such property has been stolen from them and is in the wrongful possession of the party in whose possession it has been found. Emperor v. Bishan Singh. 25 Cr. L. J. 738 : 81 I. C. 226 : 1924 Pat. 126 : 5 P. L. T. 319 : 3 Pat. 503 : A. I. R. 1925 Pat. 20.

The Magistrate must use a careful and wise discretion and where, evidence relating to six charges has gone on the record, whereas there should be evidence only as to three, it may be well the Magistrate would exercise a wise and just discretion in directing a new trial under the provisions of S. 229, Cr. 'Offences of the same kind', as referred to in S. 234 and as defined by sub-cl. (2) of the section, need not necessarily have been committed against the same person. Accused was tried at one trial for theft of bajra from one man's field and of rice from another man's field on the same night. The Sessions Judge, on appeal, held that the trial was illegal and ordered a re-trial: Held, that the accused could be tried at one trial for both the charges. Emperor v. Jagardeo. 18 Cr. L. ———S. 234—Joinder of charges—Several accused jointly concerned in one transaction—Joint trial, legality of.

The sections following S. 233 are empowering sections which require to be used with due discretion and in suitable cases. They specify possible exceptions to the principle laid down in S. 233. Where six accused persons were charged that they while carrying on a systematic swindle, had committed each of the three offences specified in the several charges: Held, that there was nothing illegal in the framing of the three joint charges against all the accused or in the trial of these three charges at one and the same trial. *Emperor v. ———S. 234—Joinder of charges.

The joinder in one trial of charges of criminal breach of trust in respect of two distinct items with a charge in respect of a gross sum (the items constituting which may be but are not specified) is a joinder of only three charges, and is not bad as contravening the provisions of S. 234, Cr. P. C. Accused was sent up for trial under Ss. 218, 409 and 460 of the Penal Code on eight counts and was convicted on four counts under Ss. 409 and 460: Held, (1) that having regard to the provisions of S. 234, the accused could only be tried on three counts in one trial: (2) that the procedure adopted in this case being in contravention of S. 234, the trial was illegal and must be set aside. *Avadh Behari Lal v. In a charge under S. 420, I. P. C., it is proper to state the exact date on which the offence is alleged to have been committed, but when the time of the alleged offence is approximately indicated and there is nothing to show that the omission to give the exact date has materially prejudiced the accused at his trial, the omission does not affect the legality of the trial. An accused person was charged with having deceitfully induced three separate persons on three different occasions in the same month to deliver property to him under circumstances which amounted to offences under S. 420 of the Penal Code: Held, that having regard to the provisions of S. 234 of the Cr. Where a person is charged, under S. 408, I. P. C., with criminal breach of trust committed in one year in respect of a lump sum of money, the Court is competent, by virtue of the provisions of Ss. 234 and 235, to try with this charge three charges for an offence under S. 477-A, I. The accused moved the High Court in revision to quash the commitment on ground that he could not be tried at one and the same trial for six charges: Held, that the order was not materially defective as the charges were distinctly specified and that it would be premature for the High Court to interfere with it at that stage as the Sessions Judge could try separately each of the charges. Where an accused person commits more than three offences of the same kind within 12 months by distinct, separate and wholly unconnected acts, he may be tried in batches of three at each trial under separate charges. Where the motive or object which actuates an accused in the commission of several distinct offences of the same kind is the same, the offences do not necessarily constitute one and the same transaction within S. 235. *Sital Prasad v. Five persons D., L., H., T. and K. were convicted in a joint trial of the following offences, respectively : D of (1) forgery under S. 467, I. P. C., (2) counterfeiting seals under S. 472, I. P. C. and (3) three offences of cheating committed on the 18th, 20th and 21st of the same month. L. of (1) abetment of the forgery aforesaid, and (2) the offences of cheating aforesaid. H. and T. of (1) abetment of the forgery, and (2) abetment of the offences of cheating. K. of (1) the forgery, and (2) abetment of the offences of cheating. It was found that D. alone was concerned in counterfeiting the seals, and that the rest of the accused joined him subsequently in a conspiracy to cheat, and forged certain receipts : Held, (1) that the forgery and the cheating were committed in the same transaction, and, therefore, all five accused could be tried jointly for these offences under S. 239, Cr. It was argued in revision that the joint trial was illegal: Held, that it was difficult to find that the two offences were committed "in one series of acts so connected together as to form the same transaction," but as the evidence which went to establish the charge of theft would have been admissible even if no such charge had been framed, not to prove the charge of theft but as evidence in proof of the charge of cheating as subsequent conduct, the accused was not prejudiced by the joinder of charges and as also the sentences were concurrent, the accused was not otherwise prejudiced and that, therefore, there was no ground for interference in revision. *Bechai v. Accused instituted two suits against two different persons, one in the Court of the City Munsif and the other in the Court of the Subordinate Judge. Both suits were tried on the Small cause side and dismissed. The Sub-Judge directed under S. 476, Cr. P. C. the prosecution of the accused under S. 209, I. P. C. and of three other persons under S. 193. The Magistrate taking cognizance of the case framed charges against the accused in respect of both the suits, and the accused entered upon his defence. Evidence was recorded for both prosecution and defence without any objection to the jurisdiction of the Magistrate to take cognizance of the offences, or as to the validity of the procedure adopted in trying both charges at one and the same trial. After he was convicted, the accused appealed to the Sessions Judge protesting against the joinder of the two charges, and also against the action of the Magistrate in taking cognizance of the offence alleged to have been committed in respect of the suit filed in the Court of the City Munsif, urging that he had been taken by

The Sessions Judge declined to interfere and the accused moved the High Court in revision: Held, that the case was covered by S. 537 (b), Cr. P. C. as the accused had acquiesced in the view taken by the Magistrate and had never at any stage of the trial in that Court raised the question of the Court's jurisdiction in respect of the offence alleged to have been committed in the City Munsif's Court: that at most the Magistrate had committed an error but the error had not in any way prejudiced the accused by the procedure adopted. *Babu Ram v. The ordinary course for the prosecution in cases in which an accused has committed numerous offences of the same kind is to select a small number of typical cases, to frame their charges accordingly and to prosecute them before a Magistrate. If the result of these proceedings is to penalize the accused and the sentence inflicted is considered sufficient to meet the ends of justice, the remaining charges which might still be brought need not be proceeded with. If, on the other hand, through some unforeseen accident or miscarriage at the trial, the accused is acquitted of those charges, then it is open to the prosecution to proceed with the remaining charges. *Emperor v. S. 234 is not limited to cases where the offences have been committed against the same person but also applies where the complainants are different persons. It is an accepted principle of law that a person cannot be convicted of a more serious offence than that with which he is charged whether on appeal or in the original Court. The reason being that he has not had an opportunity of meeting the charge in question, so far as the facts which render it more serious, or an aggravated offence, are concerned ; Therefore, a person who is charged under S. 465, Penal Code, cannot be convicted under S. 468. *Nga Po Kyin v. ———S. 234—Scope.

There is nothing in the Cr. P. C., which directs that where an accused person is alleged to have done two or more acts, each of which may fall within the definition of an offence under one or another section of the Penal Code, the section or sections in either case being the same, the joinder of the charges under those sections is illegal. Substantially the acts amount in such a case to offences punishable under the same sections of the Penal Code and therefore they are offences of the same kind. S. 234, Cr. P. C., does not say that at the most a trial must be limited to three charges : it says it must be limited to three offences and that the offences must be of the same kind. The "offence," as defined by the Code itself, is the act or omission made punishable. Publication of two seditious articles on different dates amounts to two offences, and these are punishable under the same sections of the Penal Code, and are offences of the same kind. The word 'section' in the second clause of S. 234 is not invariably to be read as singular. It is not the intention of the Cr. P. C., either expressed or implied, to exclude from the operation of S. 234 an offence because it is made the subject of more than one charge. Emperor v. Tribhuvandas.

He convicted the accused of both the offences charged, and passed a separate sentence for each offence: Held, that in view of the short time that elapsed between the theft and the return of the bullock, the Magistrate's finding as to the purpose of the theft was justifiable, and the theft and the return might be considered to be a series of acts so connected as to form the same transaction. There was, therefore, no misjoinder of charges: Held further, that the actual thief is not liable to be convicted of an offence under S. 215 in respect of property which he himself stole. As the facts proved justified, the conclusion that the accused were themselves the thieves, the convictions under S. 380 were upheld and those under S. 215 set aside. Where the question is likely to arise whether a person

The propriety of combining several charges in one trial may be questioned only if the accused is likely to be bewildered in his defence by having to meet many disconnected charges or the prospect of a fair trial is likely to be endangered by the production of a mass of evidence directed to many matters. The inclusion in one charge of different offences is only a formal defect which cannot vitiate the trial, unless it prejudices the accused or results in a failure of justice. In a trial for a charge under S. 147, Penal Code, it is not illegal to frame charges under Ss. 324 and 325 against particular accused persons, although these offences were committed by them outside the scope of the common object mentioned in the charge under S. 147, if all the acts with which the accused are charged form one transaction. *Rasul v. Accused, who were the Agents, Secretaries and Treasurers of a Company, were convicted upon charges of (1) cheating and criminal misappropriation in relation to the balance-sheet of the company for 1912, inasmuch as in that sheet a profit was shown, which they had taken, whereas the Company had not earned a profit, and (2) wilfully making a false balance-sheet of the Company for 1913. The accused were tried jointly on five charges, four of which related to the balance-sheet of 1912 and one to the balance-sheet of 1913. In the trial Court it was objected on behalf of the accused that there could not be a joint trial of the charges relating to the two balance-sheets, but the objection was disallowed on the ground that the offences relating to these balance-sheets formed part of the same transaction. On appeal to the High Court : Held, that the trial was illegal and the convictions could not be maintained. The different acts attributed to the accused in respect of the two balance-sheets did not form part of the same transaction within the meaning of Ss. 235 and 239 of the Cr. P. ———Ss. 235, 239—Joinder of charges—Several persons defrauded by different accused on different occasions—Same transaction, what amounts to—Joint trial, legality of.

Though community of purpose and design and continuity of action are essential elements in determining whether or not a number of acts were so connected together as to form part of the same transaction, yet to constitute community of purpose, the mere existence of some general purpose or design is not sufficient, the purpose in view must be something particular and definite. There can be no continuity of action where each act is a completed act in itself and the original design is accomplished so far as that act is concerned. The accused held out to various people at different times inducements of employment at handsome wages in a foreign country and defrauded them of large sums of money. They were jointly tried at one trial in respect of several of these frauds : Held, that each of the frauds was an offence complete in itself and they could not be said to form part of one transaction and the joint trial was, therefore, illegal. *Nanak Chand v. their joinder vitiates the whole trial; and the mere fact that the accused has not been prejudiced by this wrong procedure does not constitute a valid ground for condoning the defect. Several accused persons were all charged under S. 121-A, I. P. C., with conspiring to deprive His Majesty the King of the Sovereignty of British India, of conspiring to wage war against the Government and of conspiring to overawe the Government by means of criminal force. Apart from the conspiracy to effect these objects, there was disclosed on the evidence a conspiracy to commit dacoities either accompanied by murder or not accompanied by murder, and consequently certain of the conspirators were liable to punishment under S. 120-B, I. P. C., for being party to a criminal conspiracy to commit offences punishable with death or transportation for life. The actual participants in these offences were separately charged and the accused were all jointly tried on these charges: Held, that the joinder of the charges was regular and legal as all the offences formed part of the same transaction. *Ram Prasad v. It is clear from the terms of S. 235 (1), Cr. P. C., that a person may lawfully be tried for one offence of misappropriation joined with a charge of falsification which was carried out as one of the series of acts constituting the transaction by which the misappropriation was effected. The word transaction means a group of facts so connected together as to involve certain ideas, namely, unity, continuity and connection. In order to determine whether a group of facts constitutes one transaction, it is necessary to ascertain whether they are so connected together as to constitute a whole which can be properly described as a transaction. Where a clerk or cashier sets out to rob his employer, having regard to the fact that S. 222 (2) provides that he may be charged with having misappropriated the total of whatever sums he may have appropriated in course of any one year, it is not unreasonable to say that for the purposes of the section that the year's illicit operations can be regarded as one transaction. *Kashiram Jhunjhunwala v. The charges framed against eleven accused were as follows: that they were members of an unlawful assembly on a particular date at a particular place and did, in prosecution of the common object of such assembly, viz., to assault and cause hurt to certain persons, commit the offence of rioting and that in prosecution of the common object, certain individual members of that assembly committed certain individual acts and finally that all the accused had thus under S. 149, Penal Code, committed offences punishable under Ss. 148, 352, 323, 324 and 325, Penal Code. The trial Court found that the common object had not been established and therefore acquitted the accused of the offence punishable under S. 148, Penal Code, and they had been convicted only in respect of individual acts under Ss. 352, 323, 324 and 325: Held, that once it was found that a common object had not been established, there was no justifi-

Where, in a joint trial under S. 235, Cr. P. C., the accused are charged with offences triable by a Jury as well as offences triable by a Sessions Judge with the aid of assessors, and the accused are acquitted of the former set of offences but convicted of the latter, and on appeal, the conviction is set aside and re-trial is ordered, the re-trial for the latter set of offences alone is not illegal where the accused do not object to the confining of the trial to such offences alone. In cases falling within S. 263, there is one set of facts which may be viewed in different ways and so, where a re-trial is ordered, the whole facts are necessarily re-opened and nothing can prevent the Jury from coming to any verdict that they consider right upon the facts proved before them. But, where there are two different sets of facts and a verdict has been given on one set which no one impugns, then, there is no reason why, when an appeal is brought on the other set of facts, the order for re-trial should re-open both. Where there has been a verdict of a Jury acquitting the prisoners of certain charges and that verdict has not been impugned by way of appeal by the Crown, the prisoners should not again be put in peril for the same offences. *Abdul Hamid v. The accused were tried jointly under Ss. 342, 376 and 377, Penal Code. Four of the charges were for wrongful confinement: some by all the accused and some by only some of them. The charges of rape were drawn in a peculiar manner, in view of the fact that rape is in law a single act of sexual intercourse. Each of them specified an offence of rape, committed either on an indefinite date, or between periods extending from six weeks to six months. The time covered was from September 1936 to June 1937. The charge under S. 377, Penal Code, specified an offence committed between the end of December 1936, and June, 1937. The charges actually framed were either so vague and general as to be bad in law, or were in the alternative, absurd. Neither of these offences was a continuing offence. The whole story was vague in details, and the corroboration which might have been expected had not been given. The Judge did not deal with this evidence in a satisfactory way. It was marked with suspicious features. Instead of putting it before the jury and leaving it to them to decide whether they were prepared to believe it, the Judge went out of his way by special pleading to ask the jury to believe the whole of it: Held, (i) that the multiplicity of the charges tried together in the present case must have operated to the prejudice of the accused: (ii) that corroboration of the complainant in respect of the offences alleged was a practical impossibility in the absence of any definite averments as to the time of its occurrence: (iii) that the verdict of the jury was vitiated by misdirection: (iv) that the case was not a fit one in which a re-trial should be ordered. *Ali Hyder v. A charge under S. 120-B, Penal Code, of being a party to criminal conspiracy to commit theft can be jointly tried with a charge under S. 413, Penal Code, of being a habitual receiver of property stolen in pursuance of that conspiracy but cannot be jointly tried with a charge of being habitual dealer in property which is not stolen in pursuance of such conspiracy. A mere omission in the charge under S. 413, Cr. P. C., to state expressly that the accused is charged in respect of property stolen in pursuance of the conspiracy is, however, a mere error in the wording of the charge which can be cured by S. 235, Cr. P. C. where the accused has not been prejudiced by this error. Maung Ba Chit v. Emperor.

(1) of S. 403: (2) that the series of acts beginning with the forgery and ending with the user of the forged document in a Civil Court to support a civil claim must be regarded as to connected together as to form the same transaction or carrying through of a single pre-determined plan, so that under S. 235 (1), Cr. Where there is a conspiracy having one or more objects in view and certain offences are committed in pursuance of such conspiracy, the several offences generally form part of the same transaction within the meaning of that expression as used in S. 235. The principle will also apply where the several offences are by different persons. The offence of conspiracy and acts done in pursuance of the conspiracy can rightly be said to come under one transaction, and the transaction continues so long as the conspiracy continues. Where, therefore, there is a conspiracy and specific offences are committed in pursuance of such conspiracy, persons who are parties to

J. 452) to the effect that if several persons conspire to commit offences, and commit overt acts in pursuance of the conspiracy, these acts are committed in the course of the same transaction, which embraces the conspiracy and the acts done under it, and that the common concert and agreement which constitute the conspiracy serve to unify the acts done in pursuance of it, apply only to cases where a charge of conspiracy has been formulated, so that the alleged common concert serve to unify the acts done in pursuance of the conspiracy. It is entirely different where the charge is restricted in its scope to abetment by conspiracy to do a specific act. The scope of the enquiry is thereby restricted and not enlarged, so as to embrace all acts and sundry done in pursuance of a general conspiracy to do similar acts extending over not only the period involved in the charge of abetment, but over a much larger period, anterior and subsequent. Having regard to the language of S. 109, Penal Code, it cannot be said that abetment by conspiracy involves a general agreement to do a series of acts of which the act abetted is one. Even assuming that it could be so, if at the end of a long spell, new circumstances arose and the parties again agreed to make a fraudulent adjustment of their account with a view to prolong the refund of the money misappropriated, that would strictly be a second conspiracy independent of the first. Consequently, the result of the acts committed under the later conspiracy could not be tacked on to a charge on the former. Ramchandra Rango Sowkar v. Emperor.

———S. 235—“Same transaction,” meaning of—Test.

The word “transaction” is usually used to include the steps leading to a conclusion or resulting in action, though often transaction emphasizes the fact of something done or brought to a conclusion. In that sense every embezzlement constituted by the unauthorized advance would be a transaction in itself. To ascertain whether a series of acts are parts of the same transaction, it would be essential to see whether they are linked together to present a continuous whole. The expression “same transaction” as judicially interpreted signifies “related to one another in point of purpose, or as cause and effect or as principal and subsidiary acts as to denote one continuous and completed action.” The idea of completion cannot be divorced from the interpretation of the expression. The question is at what stage the act alleged has been done or completed. The mere community of purpose coupled with concert and design implied in abetment by conspiracy do not make the different acts alleged, parts of the same transaction. A mere common purpose does not constitute a transaction. As also the mere existence of some general purpose or design, such as making money at the expense of the public is not sufficient to make all acts done with that object in view part of the same transaction. One of the tests to ascertain whether the acts are part of the same transaction is to see whether there was continuity of action. The continuity of action means the following up of some initial act through all its consequences and incidents until the series of acts or groups of connected acts come to an end, either by attainment of the object or by being put an end to or abandoned. If any of those things happens and the whole process is begun over again, it is not the same transaction but a new one, in spite of the fact that the same general purpose may continue. Ramchandra Rango Soekar v. Emperor.

The word 'transaction' suggests not necessarily proximity in time so much as continuity of action and purpose, that is to say, it is not necessary that the acts constituting the crimes should have been committed all on the same occasion, but it is sufficient that, though separated by a distinct interval of time, they are closely connected by continuity of purpose and progressive action towards a single object. *Pahlad v. In order to form part of the same transaction within the meaning of Ss. 235 and 239, Cr. P. C., it is not necessary that all the acts should have been committed on the same occasion; it is sufficient that though separated by a distinct interval of time they are closely connected by continuity of purpose or progressive acts towards a single object. Whether a transaction is the same or not is a question of fact depending on the facts and circumstances of each case. Under a decree, certain lands had been given to the complainant. These lands consisted of various plots separated from others by lands belonging to other persons. On a certain day, accused went on these lands and cut and took away paddy from some of the plots. On the following day they went on other plots and cut and took away other paddy : Held, that the events of both days really formed one transaction and that, they could be jointly tried for offences committed by them on both days. *Patil Paban Ray v. On August 13, 1925, the accused in a petition to a District Magistrate made certain allegations for ill-treatment by the Police. When she was examined, she said she could not give the names of the officers who ill-treated her, for certain reasons. Subsequently on September 5, 1925, she made a statement to a Sub-Divisional Magistrate in which she specified the names of the persons who had ill-treated her. A complaint was preferred against her under S. 193, I. P. C., at the instance of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate and a charge was framed against her but the charge was permitted to be withdrawn on July 29, 1927, and the accused was acquitted under S. 494 (b), Cr. P. C.,. Meanwhile on July 25, 1927, a complaint was made by the District Magistrate against the accused charging her with having given false information to a public servant. Objection was raised before the trying Magistrate that the prosecution was barred under S. 403, Cr. P. C., because of the previous acquittal under S. 494 (b) : Held, that the prosecution was not barred under S. 403, Cr. P. C., inasmuch as the case fell under Sub-s. 1 of S. 235, Cr. P. C. and consequently within the scope of Sub-s. (4) of S. 403, of the Code. The limitation of the exception in Sub-s. There was only one act of criminal breach of trust charged against A. It was contended for A. that the whole trial was illegal and void as he was tried at one trial for two distinct offences : Held, that the case fell under S. 235 (1) as there was only one act of criminal breach of trust charged against A., and the falsification of accounts charged was an offence which formed part of the transaction as to the criminal breach of trust, because the accounts alleged to have been falsified related to the act charged under S. 408, Penal Code. *Emperor v. In order that two or more offences committed by one person may form part of the same transaction so that the offender may be charged with and tried at one trial for all the offences, the acts done must be so related to each other in point of purpose, or as cause and effect, or as principal and subsidiary acts, as to constitute one continuous action. The test to be applied is not so much proximity in times as continuity of action and purpose. Where, however, criminal acts are separated by an interval of time, the length of the interval may be an important indication that such continuity is wanting. Emperor v. Hari Raot.

———S. 236—Alternative charge—Alternative charge in respect of offence under Penal Code and Special Law—Framing of law.

Per Pratt, J. C. (Crouch, A. J. C. dissenting) —An alternative charge under S. 236, Criminal Procedure Code, cannot be framed in respect of distinct offences, nor even in respect of cognate offences when the difference is one of degree, i. e., as to the intention imputed to the accused or as to some circumstance of aggravation, S. 236, Criminal Procedure Code, applies to those cases only in which the prosecution cannot establish exclusively any one offence but is able, on the facts which can be proved, to exclude the innocence of the accused and to show that he must have committed one of two or more offences. Offences charged in the alternative arise out of the same delictum and are, therefore, necessary cognate offences. The doubt, referred to in S. 236, Criminal Procedure Code, can only arise when the legal character of the acts of the accused might be considered ambiguous, and the section authorizes a charge in the alternative when it is doubtful which of several offences the facts which can be proved will constitute and not in a case where there may be doubt as to the fact which constitutes one of the elements of the offence, that is, the corpus delicti. The criminal intention imputed to the accused must be specifically determined and not allowed to remain a subject of doubt in an alternative charge. S. 236, Criminal Procedure Code, contemplates a state of facts constituting a single offence but it is doubtful whether the act or acts involved may amount to one or other of several cognate offences. Per Crouch, A. J. C.—The essential difference between (1) cumulative charges, (2) alternative charges, and (3) charges in the alternative is, that under the first, the Court is asked to convict of two or more offences, under the second, of any one specified offence, and under the third of one or other two offences, without specifying which. The alternative offences need not necessarily be offences dealt with under the same Chapter of the Penal Code or “cognate” in any other technical sense, but they must, from the nature of the case, be such that the commission of each can reasonably be inferred from the same facts. Ganesh Krishna v. Emperor. 12 Cr. L. J. 224 : 10 I. C. 168 : 5 S. L. R. 16.

———S. 236—Alternative charges, and charges in the alternative, difference between—Nature of offences for which alternative charges are permissible.

The accused, a postal peon, was entrusted with certain bearing letters which it was his duty to deliver and recover the amount of the postage due. He returned bringing neither letters nor money and gave no explanation. At his trial he was charged in the alternative under S. 409, Indian Penal Code, or S. 52 of the Post Office Act, in that he either dishonestly converted to his own use the amount recovered on account of the bearing letters entrusted to him or that he threw the letters away : Held, that the charge in the alternative was bad in law. S. 367 (3) of the Criminal Procedure Code and Ss. 40 and 72 of the Penal Code refer only to offence under the Penal Code. Consequently, an alternative charge cannot be framed in respect of an offence under the Penal Code and an offence under a Special Law; nor can a Court inflict any sentence on a person found guilty in the alternative of an offence under the Penal Code and another under a Special Act. *Ganesh Krishna v. A person may be charged with the offence of murder, under S. 302, Penal Code, and in the alternative, with the offence of causing disappearance of the evidence of murder under S. 201, Penal Code. However strong the suspicion may be that a person has committed murder, yet if it is not established on evidence that he is the murderer, his conviction under S. 201, Penal Code, is not illegal. A murderer cannot be charged under S. 201, inasmuch as a person cannot be convicted both as a principal and as an accessory after the fact. Andal Shah v. Emperor. 26 Cr. L. J. 909 : 88 I. Alternative charges under two sections cannot be combined together in one head of charge. S. 236, Cr. P. C. does not apply where there is any doubt as to the facts, but applies where there is a doubt as to the law applicable to a certain set of facts which have been proved. When the facts are in doubt, there is no objection to the Magistrate framing alternative charges, but at the conclusion of the case he is not entitled to compromise his doubts as to true facts of the case by convicting in the alternative. He is bound to come to a distinct finding as to the facts, and then only if the law applicable to the facts which he considers to have been proved is doubtful, he may convict in the alternative. *Po Thin Gyi v. Where a charge is at all complicated, it is the duty of the Judge, even though Counsel may be engaged, to clear the ground and to be quite sure that each accused or his Counsel clearly understands what case he has to meet. Alternative charges may be properly run against an accused person on the same set of facts, but alternative charges which include offences which do not arise out of the same set of facts as those with which they are linked, even though tried in the same proceedings, ought to be made clear to the accused before the trial and clearly dealt with in the Judge's final decision. *Jodha Singh v. S. 236 applies only when there is no doubt as to the facts of the case, but only under which section of the law upon the facts found the accused would be guilty. S. 236 which must control S. 237, applies only when from the evidence led by the prosecution it is doubtful which of the offences has been committed by the accused. Where, therefore, the evidence which has been led by the prosecution leads to one result and one result only, it cannot be said that it is doubtful which of the offences has been committed by the accused. *Govind Mato v. ———Ss. 236, 237—Applicability—Where no doubt as to offence, whether Ss. 236, 237, apply.

S. 236 applies only to a case in which there is a single act or a series of acts of such a nature that it is doubtful which of several offences is constituted by the Criminal act or acts. The application of S. 237 is, by its express terms, restricted to the case mentioned in S. 236. Therefore, where there is no doubt as to the offence, if any committed, provided the facts alleged are established, neither S. 236 nor S. 237 can have any possible application. Akram Ali v. Emperor. 15 Cr. L. J. 41 : 22 I. C. 184 : 18 C. L. J. 574 : A. I. R. 1914 Cal. 309.

The provisions of S. 72, Penal Code, and of Ss. 236 and 367 (3), Cr. P. C., apply only to cases where the actual facts are established but there is a doubt as to the application of the law to the proved facts. Thus where the doubt entertained by the Sessions Judge is whether there was sufficient proof that the accused had in fact committed murder or had merely been guilty of causing evidence of the murder to disappear, in such a case, an alternative conviction on both offences is not contemplated by law, and the Judge is bound to acquit the accused of the more serious offence once he finds the evidence insufficient to support that charge. Partapa v. Emperor. 14 Cr. L. J. 664 : 21 I. C. 904 : 11 Pr. 1913 Cr.

———Ss. 236, 562—Applicability—Penal Code Ss. 215, 457—Conviction in the alternative under S. 215 or S. 457.

S. 236 does not apply where there is any doubt as to the facts, but applies where there is a doubt as to the law applicable to a certain set of facts which have been proved. The Magistrate is not entitled to compromise his doubts as to the true facts of the case by convicting in the alternative. He is bound to come to a distinct finding as to the facts. A Magistrate cannot, therefore, convict a person in the alternative of an offence either under S. 457 or S. 215, Penal Code. Emperor v. Nga Po Wun. 28 Cr. L. J. 759 : 103 I. C. 839 : 6 Bur. L. ———S. 236 — Applicability — Application when offences fall under different chapters of Penal Code.

For the application of S. 236, it is not essential that the offences should fall under the same chapter and there may be border line cases where the two offences concerned do fall under different chapters. Wrongful restraint is probably such a border-line case, because, although it is under the chapter dealing with offences to the body, it is not necessary that anything be done directly to the body at all; it may be locking a door or by building a wall, or something of that kind. There is, therefore, no necessary obstacle to the application of S. 236, that the two sections involved fall under different chapters of the Code. Rati Ram v. Emperor. 38 Cr. L. J. 989 : 170 I. When a man has been convicted of committing an act constituting an offence, and further evidence subsequently comes to light which shows that his act constituted a graver offence than that of which he was convicted, he cannot merely on that ground alone be put upon his trial for the graver offence. Therefore, a person who is convicted under S. 31 of the Rangoon Police Act for being in possession of an article supposed to be stolen cannot be again tried and convicted later on for the offence under S. 457, Penal Code, simply on the ground that the owner of the article is traced and some further evidence is available to constitute an offence under S. 457, Penal Code. *Nga Shwe Yi v. There is no definition of the expression 'minor offence' in S. 238, and the test by which an offence is deemed in S. 238 (1) to be major or minor is not the gravity of the punishment incurred. The Sub-section does not refer to the gravity of punishment at all; it merely refers to the number of particulars constituting the offence; if a number of particulars is needed to constitute the offence, then for the purposes of S. 238 (1) it may be called the major offence, if a combination of some only of such particulars constitutes a complete offence, then that offence is referred to in S. 238 (1), as the minor offence. It should not, however, be overlooked that S. 238, Sub-s. (2), speaks of the proof of additional facts reducing an offence to a minor offence, and this does not accord with the view that the minor offence must always consist of fewer particulars than the major offence. *Emperor v. An accused person was charged with offences under Ss. 147 and 325 read with S. 149, Penal Code. The Jury, however, convicted the appellant of an offence under S. 147 and further held that he was specifically guilty of an offence under S. 325 and the Sessions Judge accepted the verdict and convicted the accused accordingly. It was contended in appeal that, in accepting the verdict of the Jury for the offence under S. 325, with which the appellant was not specifically charged, the learned Additional Sessions Judge in reality used the Jury as assessors and that, therefore, this Court is competent to go into the facts of the case precisely as if the verdict of the Jury amounted merely to an opinion as from assessors: Held, that the effect of S. 238, Cr. P. C., was to invest a Jury trying a major offence with authority to find that the facts proved only constitute a minor offence and to return a verdict of guilty of such offence and that the High Court could not go into the facts on which the Jury delivered the verdict. Narayan Singh v. Emperor.

———S. 238 (2)—“Minor” offence, meaning of—Charge of conspiracy with two objects—Conspiracy with only one of them if necessarily minor offence.

The words “minor offence” have not been defined in Cr. P. C. Where a conspiracy with two different objects is alleged, it is by no means certain that a conspiracy with only one of these objects will be a “minor offence”; each would be a distinct conspiracy by itself involving a distinct agreement as the gist of the offence and not related to the other as principal or subsidiary to it. Nor can it be said that where an offence is alleged to constitute the object of a conspiracy as charged, a conspiracy to commit a minor offence will be a minor offence within the meaning of S. 238 (2), Cr. P. C. Much less can it be contended that an offence (or an offence minor to it) alleged to constitute the object of a conspiracy is a minor offence to offence of conspiracy. *Goloke Behari Takal v. That is clear from the expression 'may' which appears in S. 239. But the discretion vested in the trying Magistrate is to be exercised by him judicially, and according to certain well-established principles. Where the trial Court has judicially exercised the discretion vested in it, the High Court will not interfere. But where it has not exercised a wise discretion in directing the splitting of a case against several accused, the High Court will interfere. Dholimal Karoomal v. Emperor. 37 Cr. L. J. 716 : 162 I. Under S. 239, two or more persons can be tried together for offences committed in the course of the same transaction, and it is not necessary that the offences should have been committed simultaneously or within a short interval of each other, but there must be a continuity of purpose of action running through all of them. The determining factor as to the legality of a joint trial is not its result. When a proposal for a boycott is made by the President of an Association, and, shortly afterwards, the Secretary and a member take joint action to boycott the person against whom the resolution is directed, the inference is that they are acting in furtherance of a common purpose, or, in other words, that they are taking part in a conspiracy. Acts done in pursuance of such a conspiracy must be deemed to be part of the same transaction within the meaning of S. 239, and the joint trial of persons responsible for such acts is, therefore, permissible for offences under S. 4 (a) and 4 (c) of the Burma Anti-Boycott Act. Where several persons are tried together for proposing and promoting a boycott under the Burma Anti-Boycott Act, the mere acquittal of the proposer does not render the joint trial illegal, nor does it involve the acquittal of the persons charged with promoting the boycott. *Emperor v. confess to complicity in the crime, and to acquiesce in being prosecuted for it, the object being to share the loot with the real thieves. To this end, the accused wrongfully confined F., fabricated false evidence in order to procure his conviction, knowingly instituted a false prosecution against him and in that prosecution gave false evidence in order to secure his conviction. All the five accused were jointly tried. A. was convicted of fabricating and giving false evidence to procure conviction of an offence, of wrongful confinement and of causing criminal proceedings to be instituted against a person without just or lawful ground. E. was convicted of giving false evidence with intent to procure conviction of the same offence as A. intended. It was urged that the joint trial of A. and E. was illegal: Held, that the joint trial of A. and E. was not illegal inasmuch as (a) S. 239, Cr. P. C., was distinctly applicable and, in the circumstances of the case, the joint trial was not only legal but was demanded in the interest of public time and public convenience; (b) there was one sustained and continuous plot for screening the real offenders in the robbery and of exposing an innocent man to a false charge with a view that accused or some of them might participate in the stolen property; to secure this end various means had to be adopted, one of the means, a mere incident in the whole transaction, being the giving of false evidence in the prosecution of F.; (c) accusation against all the accused was that they carried out a single scheme by successive acts done at intervals, but there was complete unity of project and the whole series of acts were so linked together by one motive and design as to constitute one transaction within the meaning of S. 239. *Emperor v. ————— S. 239—Joint trial—Same transaction—Identity of purpose.

Where certain persons are witnesses on the same side in a criminal case and all give evidence on the same point and to the same effect, to prove the same fact, the evidence in the case of all the witnesses is given in the same transaction within S. 239, Cr. P. C., so as to make a joint trial of such persons for perjury legal. There is the most obvious identity of purpose in such a case. For a joint trial under S. 239, identity of purpose is sufficient. Community of purpose in the sense of conspiracy is not in any way necessary, though if it is present, its presence will be a further element supporting a finding that offences were committed in the same transaction. There are only two methods provided by law for conducting a trial or trials of several accused. Either the trials must be separate if the law requires them to be separate or they may be and ordinarily will be joint, if the law permits them to be joint, unless for some particular reason the Judge considers that the trials should be held separately. It is very dangerous and not in accordance with law for a Judge, with the very best intentions, to follow some procedure which is really neither one nor the other of the two procedures provided by law. Rafi-uz-zaman v. Chhotey Lal.

————— S. 239—Joint trial—Same transaction.

It suffices for the purpose of justifying a joint trial that the accusation alleges offences committed by each accused to have been committed in the same transaction, within the meaning of S. 239. It is not necessary that the charge should contain the statement as to the transaction being one and the same. It is the tenour of the accusation and not the wording of the charge that must be considered as the test. In S. 239 a series of acts separated by intervals of time are not excluded, provided that the object of those jointly tried has throughout been directed to one and the same objective. If the accused started together for the same goal, this suffices to justify the joint trial, even if incidentally, one of those jointly tried has done an act for which the other may not be responsible. The foundation for the procedure in the section is the association of persons concurring from start to finish to attain the same end. Emperor v. Dalto Hanmant.

—S. 239—Joint trial—Validity, test of.

The test to be applied for judging of the validity of a trial which purports to have taken place under the provisions of S. 239, is the accusation made and not the result of the trial. In order to decide, therefore, whether several persons can be lawfully tried jointly with having committed offences forming parts of the same transaction, the Court has to look to the accusation, that is to say, the prosecution case as set forth in the charges, and if according to that case, the offences are such as could be regarded as parts of the same transaction, it will be justified in holding a joint trial. The matter must be looked at as it appeared to the Magistrate at the time when he framed the charges and not to the state of affairs long after the trial had proceeded on its way leading to the convictions of the accused. Where, therefore, having regard to all the facts before the Magistrate at the time when he was framing the charges against the accused as directed by S. 254, Cr. P. C., he was acting judicially and properly exercising the discretion given him by S. 239, it cannot be held that there was illegality in the joint trial as to warrant quashing of proceedings, especially when no prejudice was caused to the accused on account of the alleged irregularity. *Rash Behari Shaw (Handa) v. There may be cases of perjury which are committed in the course of the same transaction and which, therefore, may be jointly tried. Where the offence of verifying a false statement is done jointly by two persons in pursuance of a common object, the offences are committed in the course of the same transaction. When perjury is committed by witnesses in the course of the same trial and obviously in pursuance of the design and defence set out in the written statement, these actions form part of one conspiracy and hence one transaction. ———Ss. 239 (d), 537—Joint trial—Tests—Common object.

The question of joinder and misjoinder depends on the form of the accusation made rather than on the facts actually proved at the trial. The nature of the charge is really the crucial point. Before a joint trial can be held to be permissible or justifiable, it must be established that each one of the accused was so connected with the other accused that the act done by one of them may be said to have been done conjointly with the other. The fact that the accused are all servants of the same master and so connected with the same person, does not necessarily involve connection with each other for the purposes of the offences charged. Similarly common purpose would not be enough to make offences part of the same transaction, if the offenders act independently. Where the accusation does not involve anything from which it could be said that the accused are charged with different offences as forming part of the same transaction, joint trial cannot be held. *Nathu Chaudhury v. The expression "same transaction" used in Ss. 235 and 239 has not been defined in the Code, but the illustrations to the sections make the intention of the legislature sufficiently clear. If a series of acts are so connected together by proximity of time, community of criminal intent, continuity of action and purpose, or by the relation of cause and effect, then the accused may be charged with, and tried at one trial for every offence committed in such series of acts. If more persons than one are accused of different offences, committed in a series of acts so connected, they may be tried together; (2) All the criminal acts which are by English and Indian Law regarded as subsidiary to an offence are included in the same transaction as the offence. Instances of such acts are in the case of theft, the disposing of stolen property and handing it over to a receiver, and in case of murder, the concealment of the body; (3) However, even where several criminal acts can be included in the same transaction, no joinder of charges or trials should be permitted which will result in bewildering any of the accused. *Emperor v. A person who has been charged with the offence of dacoity cannot consequently be convicted of an offence under S. 412 of the Penal Code. The offence under S. 412 of the Penal Code is a totally different offence from that of dacoity committed at a different time and not in the course of the same transaction within the meaning of S. 239 of the Cr. Where, however, the offences are different, falling under different sections, the dates of the offences are different, the sets of persons committing the offences are different and the persons or sets of persons against whom the offences are committed are different, they cannot, ordinarily, be held to have been committed in the same transaction. In order to constitute one transaction, there should be such unity of purpose, such continuity of action and such proximity of time in the happenings as would lead a trained judicial mind to grasp them as forming a single transaction. Per Napier, J.—To constitute acts as one transaction, prior conspiracy among the actors is not required. Before different offences can be said to have been committed 'in the course of the same transaction' by the various persons charged with the same, it must be seen whether such persons and a common purpose resulting in actions which constitute a concatenation of events ultimately leading to the commission of such offences. The tests of unity of time and unity of place as regards the offences with which the various accused persons may be charged are not always safe criteria for the purpose of determining whether or not these offences were committed in 'the course of the same transaction.' A joint trial of several persons charged with offence not committed in the course of the same transaction is not an irregularity which is curable under S. 537 but is an illegality which vitiates the whole trial. *Muhammadi v. The term "offence" under S. 239, includes minor or alternative offences within the meaning of S. 235 (2) or S. 236. Under Cl. (c) of S. 239, three offences of the same kind may be tried at once, but not three transactions of the same kind. The meaning and nature of transaction is a question which commonsense and the ordinary use of language must decide on the particular facts of the case. The causes of S. 239, are mutually exclusive, in the sense that they cannot be added one to another so as to bring some of the persons charged under one clause and some under another and so to put them upon their trial all together at one and the same time; but they are not mutually exclusive in the sense that persons accused of an offence and persons accused of abetment or of an attempt can only be tried at one trial because their case comes under Cl. (b). But if more than one person are to be tried and charged together, their case must be brought within one of the clauses of S. 239, Cr. P. C., before they can be tried together on the trial is contrary to law. Chuharmal Nirmaldas v. Emperor.

The Cl. (d) of S. 239 is expressly an exception from S. 233 and enables a plurality of offences to be dealt with in the same trial. But it does not import either expressly or by implication the limitation set out in S. 234 according to which not more than three offences of the same kind committed within the space of 12 months can be tried together or the limitation contained in S. 235 (1) under which more offences than one committed by the same person can only be tried together if they are in one series of acts so connected together as to form the same transaction, in which case there is no specific limit of number. Nor is there any limit of number of offences specified in S. 239 (d). The one and only limitation there is that the accusation should be of offences "committed in the course of the same transaction." Whatever scope of connotation may be included in the words "the same transaction," if several persons conspire to commit offences, and commit overt acts in pursuance of the conspiracy, these acts are committed in the course of the same transaction, which embraces the conspiracy and the acts done under it. The common concert and agreement which constitute the conspiracy, serve to unify the acts done in pursuance of it. The relevant point of time at which the condition prescribed by S. 239 (d) must be fulfilled is that of the accusation and not that of the eventual result. It is true that the opinion of the Magistrate may be wrong in law as to there being a same transaction, or the evidence which led him to think prima facie that this condition existed, may be insufficient or may eventually be falsified. It would result in any such events that the prosecution is enabled at the trial to join separate offences contrary to the terms of Ss. 234 and 235. And if improper advantage is taken of S. 239 (d), so as to bring into one proceeding a great number of accused, and a great multiplicity of offences, with serious hardship and injustice to the accused a ground for an amendment of the section by the Legislature, notwithstanding the warning of the High Court and their determination to see that accused are not being unfairly dealt with and to prevent any procedure by which cases which should be comparatively short and simple become unweildily complicated and lengthy. But even so that can be no ground why the Court should misconstrue the section. It must be hoped, and indeed assumed, that Magistrates will exercise their discretion fairly and honestly.
